The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to whether it costs more under the Senate method of paying for taking testimony before their committees than under the House method. In the House we employ a regular staff of committee stenographers, and in the Senate they have no regular corps. Here we are appropriating $100,000 for the expenses of committee stenographers.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say to the gentleman that there is no way of getting a fair comparison on that proposition, because the hearings before the House committees are very much greater than the hearings before the Senate committees.

Mr. STAFFORD. You do not know what is the total amount we carry for providing for taking testimony before House committees?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $30,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, because it is legislation unauthorized upon an appropriation bill; and I would like to be heard a moment, if the Chair will permit me.

Mr. Chairman, there is no law, or substantive law, authorizing a restaurant either for the Senate or the House. It has been carried by resolution only, so far as the House is concerned. I do not know what the Senate restaurant, in addition to this $30,000, is costing out of their contingent fund to the taxpayers of the Nation, but I do know what our own House of Representatives restaurant is costing, because that was developed by our committee. I read from page 14 of the hearings on this bill. Our distinguished chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ANDERSON] asked this question of the Clerk of the House:

So the restaurant is running at a cost to the Government of approximately $35,000 a year, if it is operated all the time?

Mr. PAGE. Yes; $36,000 if it operates year in and year out.

So it shows that our restaurant, or that of the House of Representatives, above what it takes in is an actual loss and cost to the taxpayers of this Nation of $36,000 a year, if it is run regularly.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. Let me show you how the expenses run up. On the preceding page—page 13—is shown what they get. The main chef gets $200 a month; the baker gets $120 per month; the second cook gets $110 per month; the fry cook, $80; the assistant fry cook, $60; the butcher, $80; ice plant man, $90; helper, $40; another helper, $40; oyster man, $50; pot washer, $50; helper, $40; dishwasher, $40; another dishwasher, $40; fireman, $60; coffee boy, $60; steam table man, $80; sandwich man, $60; helper, $40; manager storeroom, $100; checker, $90; telautograph, $40; assistant manager, $150; manager, $150; second cook, $125; checker, $90; three waiters, one at $20, and two at $40 each.

I am reading from page 13 of the hearings.

Mr. ANDERSON. May I say to the gentleman that that has absolutely nothing to do with the item against which the gentleman has raised the point of order? That refers to the House restaurant and not the Senate restaurant.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman must have been asleep.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is never asleep.

Mr. BLANTON. I said I did not know what the Senate was costing, but I was showing what the House restaurant was costing.

Mr. ANDERSON. That has nothing to do with this point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The loss in the House restaurant does have a bearing on what the Senate restaurant is costing the people of the Nation. The gentleman may not be able to see the relevancy of it, but possibly the chairman will, as he is quite noted for his manner of seeing things that are plain. [Applause and laughter.] I want to continue reading about the help in the House restaurant: Buss man, $35; silver man, $40; waiter, $40; half-time buss man, $24; waiter, $20; another buss man, $35; 17 waiters at amounts varying from $20 to $40; head waiter, $100; another waiter, $20; cashier, $80; 5 waitresses at from $20 to $50; checker, $75; another buss boy, $40; another waitress, $40; another silver man, $40; another waiter, $60; second cook, $60; dishwasher, $40; another chef, $100; runner, $40; another coffee boy, $40; head waiter, $75; head waiter, $40; with the names of each of these employeees in this restaurant given in the hearing.

Mr. Chairman, that ought to stop. I submit to our colleagues that it ought to stop. In all fairness we ought not to be spending this $36,000 a year for our restaurant, because if it is run all the time, that is what it will cost. We ought not to be spending the people's money in that way. I am sure that we are all able to pay every dollar of the expense of every bit of our meals.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I just wish to say to the gentleman that I was talking yesterday to a Senator who is chairman of the subcommittee that has that Senate restaurant in charge, and he said that that institution was running at a profit.

Mr. BLANTON. Then we ought to change the management of our restaurant, because when the chairman of the subcommittee asked Mr. Page if this restaurant is run at a cost to the Government of approxmately $35,000 a year, Mr. Page said, "Yes; $36,000 if it is run all the time." When we inaugurated this restaurant downstairs, my friend from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] said it was our purpose to have just as fine chefs, just as fine cooks, just as fine food, and just as fine service as they had in the Senate; no better, but just as fine; and I presume that the managers here in the House are just as able business men as those at the other end of the Capitol, and if it costs us a loss of $36,000 to the Government every year for the House restaurant, I do not believe the Senate can run its restaurant any cheaper; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it ought to stop. We ought to put these restaurants in charge of private managers on a commercial basis and let them charge us just whatever they have to in order to make a profit, and let us pay for it, and we will feel better. I submit the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, what the gentleman from Texas has said has nothing to do with the point of order. The whole question here is whether there is any authority for this provision. I must confess that the language "including personal and other services" may possibly be subject to a point of order. I do not know. I have not been able to confirm my impression, but my impression is that this is authorized by a resolution of the Senate; and if it is, it is authorized in this bill. Obviously, so far as the Senate expenses go, a Senate resolution has all the force of an authorization of law. I am sorry that I am not able to give the Chair the benefit of the direct citation.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will notice, the language of this paragraph is for maintenance and improvement of the building and the service rendered. I maintain that it does not require a statute to authorize the appropriation. Congress can make any appropriation it wants to for the carrying on and the running of the House and the Senate. They can appropriate $100,000,000 if they want to, without any statute specially authorizing it, to operate any function of Congress. It does not take a law.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas. I will speak as near the point of order as he did, though he worked himself up into such a red-faced frenzy that I could scarcely understand him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has to decide this, and the Chair will ask the gentleman to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. IRELAND. That is my intention.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has frankly admitted that he is not going to talk any more to the point of order than the gentleman from Texas did, so I think he might as well turn this way.

The CHAIRMAN. It is entirely immaterial to the Chair. The Chair will try to listen.

Mr. IRELAND. With the permission of the Chair I would like to address my remarks to the House on points of information on the subject covered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I think all the figures that he gave to you were accurate, much more accurate than the usual statements he makes.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to stand for any more of that monkey business. The gentleman from Illinois can not make that kind of a remark to me, and I am not going to stand for it any more.

Mr. IRELAND. What would you like?

Mr. BLANTON. Just simply not make that sort of remark; that is all.

Mr. IRELAND. To return to the original subject in hand, the necessity for the present method of managing the restaurant was apparent to all at the time we went under the present arrangement.

It came about in this way: The employees of the Senate restaurant were all put on the pay roll and this appropriation was made and has been made for some time. They took no account of the overhead expenses thus created for employees in operating the restaurant. They accumulated quite a surplus and then reduced the prices. Naturally the Members of the House drifted over to patronize the Senate restaurant with better food and lower prices. I think the Senate resented this, and correctly. No one likes to be crowded out of their own preserves. That was cutting into the House restaurant so that we were under the necessity of either adopting the same system or discontinuing the restaurant entirely. We adopted the former system, placed the employees of the restaurant on the pay roll. Now we both operate in about the same manner, both make about the same record.

I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that out of the profits of the restaurant—excluding the overhead charges for hiring employees, and they can not be secured at a less figure than the gentleman has mentioned—for instance, we pay a waiter $40, and the Senate pays $60—but out of the profits accumulated in every month save one—exclusive of the employees of the restaurant—and that was when the House was in session only part of the time, and without the full patronage when it is impossible to conduct it at a profit, they have made a profit. Out of the profits we might have made in the House management of the restaurant we have been compelled to make a great many purchases of materials, linen, china, glassware, and silverware that have been carried away by souvenir hunters or been borrowed in the House Office Building by clerks of Members and through carelessness not returned. A few items may interest the House. It has been necessary to purchase 150 dozen napkins. They cost $7 a dozen at least. They have disappeared, and it is impossible, without hiring a force of detectives, that would cost more than the restaurant, to stop it. Ten dozen table cloths, at least $50 a month for dishes, not entirely due to breakage, although some were destroyed in handling. Three hundred dollars goes for broken glassware. The repairs we have kept up out of the profits have been over $300 a year on items like repairing the oven, and so forth. The rent of the telautograph, which we can not get along without and give any sort of service to Members, requires the expenditure of approximately $300 a year. The laundry runs from $300 a month up.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I did not quite catch the number of napkins the gentleman said it was necessary to replace.

Mr. IRELAND. One hundred and fifty dozen.

Mr. GARNER. Was that number of napkins worn out during the period of one year?

Mr. IRELAND. I do not think many of them were worn out.

Mr. GARNER. Who stole 150 dozen napkins?

Mr. IRELAND. Now, the gentleman is giving me too big a job. All we know is they disappeared or were worn out.

Mr. GARNER. It seems to me the management ought to have a better checking system than to let 150 dozen napkins get away in one year.

Mr. IRELAND. Does not the gentleman understand that the manager is in a menial capacity serving the House of Representatives, and it is impossible to question the employees of the Members of the House without creating a sensation or a situation that would be worse than losing the entire property?

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman mean to say that in case my clerk should take a dozen napkins and fail to return them that he would have sufficient timidity not to ask him to bring them back?

Mr. IRELAND. I do not imagine the gentleman's clerk would do that.

Mr. GARNER. Well, somebody's clerks have taken 150 dozen napkins.

Mr. IRELAND. Perhaps they have not taken them at all, but it was necessary to purchase that number. I stand squarely by the management of this restaurant. They are honest, they are square, they are frugal, and give the best service it is possible to render under the circumstances. Everything does not please me and it does not please all the Members, and it does not always meet with the approval of the manager. The same situation is in effect here in relation to food control that is in effect at the Senate restaurant, at the Washington Hotel, at the Wardman Park Hotel, and other places, and their experience is even worse than ours.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. SISSON. I must confess that I am greatly surprised at the idea that the clerks of Members or Members themselves in some mysterious way have disposed of 150 dozen napkins taken out of the restaurant and the waiters are held absolutely not responsible. If the clerks are purloining napkins, or anybody connected with the House, it is due to the management to keep proper check on them. I do not think it is a proper excuse to say that it might make some Member's clerk mad. Why, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, that is an awful charge to make against the clerical force of Members of Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. I wish the gentleman would not misinterpret my remarks. It is largely due to carelessness; I do not think it is malicious in any respect. The same thing applies to the silverware, but in a lesser degree. Now, these napkins—I do not like to discuss these little foolish items——

Mr. SISSON. They are not foolish items; it is as wrong to steal a napkin as it is a silver plate.

Mr. IRELAND. I will not question the morality of it.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman may make light of it, but if he puts morality on that low plane we ought to have somebody else have charge of the restaurant.

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, no; I am not even going to take offense at the gentleman's efforts.

Mr. SISSON. I took no offense except at the manner in which the gentleman addressed his remarks to me.

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, I humbly apologize to the gentleman, if he interpreted my manner or remarks as meaning to give offense. It is not a question of honesty or integrity so much as it is a question of carelessness, failure to return supplies, forgetfulness, laundry, wear and tear, and so forth.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if anyone knows the life of a restaurant napkin and the difference there is between a napkin in your own home and one that is laundered every day or every other day in a restaurant. They wear out amazingly. When I thought I was supplied for a year I have had to go out and buy 15 or 30, or even 100 dozen at a time. It is like the everlasting question to the wife that is being asked to-day all over the country: "What did you do with all that stuff I bought for you?" [Laughter.] Men do not understand how household equipment wears out.

To me as a practical housekeeper this annually recurring attack upon the restaurant seems as unreasonable as it is unwarranted. "Men must work," and just so surely men must eat wisely and well if they are to work effectively. You know what our daily life is in its ordinary routine—a hasty glance at newspapers with the morning meal, a rush to the office, then reading mail and dictation of most important replies, followed by departmental visits or hearings in overcrowded and consequently ill-ventilated committee rooms, interrupted by a peremptory quorum call and hasty adjournment of committees.

Legislation for which attention is so peremptorily demanded is often of vital importance, requiring earnest, continuous attention. Then, when Members suddenly realize a need of food, it is now close at hand and served under sanitary conditions. I have made several careful inspections of the entire restaurant plant, following minutely the routine of purchase, preparation, and serving. I have examined storage, refrigeration, and cooking. I have looked into the matter of handling trays coming back from the service of customers. A great source of danger is in the so-called "comebacks" of a cheap eating house, where fragmentary portions are returned to be served again, after possible contamination by germ-laden spoon or fork. The sanitary cleansing of all cooking and eating utensils is imperative. All such utensils must be clean, whole, and unbroken. The overhead cost of the restaurant service is greatly increased in observing these precautions. It is penny wise and pound foolish not to recognize the enormous loss of efficiency that must result from such insanitary conditions as formerly prevailed in the restaurant from worn-out plumbing and defective sewerage.

I would not for a moment seem to suggest that any of my colleagues are insincere in criticisms of "the Government running a restaurant" or strive to give a wrong impression in regard to the way in which it is conducted. When the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] some months ago had inserted in the RECORD an entire House restaurant bill of fare, from which prices were omitted, he could not have intended to convey the impression that saloons in leaving Washington had left a free lunch at the Capitol. If for one moment I considered the restaurant—as he wants people to believe—a graft on the part of the Congress, I not only would not defend it, but I should never eat a mouthful in it. As it is, I am glad to avail myself of good food served so satisfactorily that only meticulous criticisms can be made.

I trust that my record as a member of the "weaker" and generally considered loquacious sex will be proof that I have tried not to waste the time of the House by talking unnecessarily—surely where speech costs so much, silence is golden—and I may be allowed to say, therefore, that if we would all follow the plan of trying to be faithful at meetings of committees to which we belong, if we would familiarize ourselves so far as possible with bills which we know are coming up for consideration, we could handle business with an intelligence now lacking, and by elimination of useless talk we would save expense in printing the RECORD that would pay the entire cost of the restaurant several times over.

We are privileged to sit in these legislative halls in the most wonderful Capitol in the world. There are other shrines of American liberty, but none to which so many people of the United States are drawn by eager and patriotic interest. Is there anyone on this floor who can say that he has acquainted himself with all the wonders of this majestic structure? Those who come linger under the compelling spell of their magnificent surroundings. To many on their honeymoon luncheon here seems all ambrosia and nectar. To ambitious students comes a thrill of future purpose as they actually eat in so wondrous a place.

Through a long vista of years from the time I first came here a happy college girl at Easter holiday, lunch with the surroundings of House or Senate restaurant stands out vividly among treasured memories. The daughter of a missionary to the Indians, to whom under the laws of the United States the sale of liquor was—as it still is—a crime, I was puzzled and perturbed to see liquor served as ordinarily as food; and I may add that in looking down from the gallery the bewilderment grew at seeing men the whole world called great, by whose laws Indians who had no vote, no part in government, were sedulously protected, did not protect themselves.

This was my first disillusionment. Indians got liquor in spite of law; Congressmen got liquor by law. Liquor seemed to have ill effects on Indian and statesman alike. And so, in my inner soul grew the feeling that for this, as for all the ills of humanity, we must ourselves obey law and at the same time try to live in the light of life coming from the example of the world's greatest humanitarian, who was the exemplar of love.

In the wilderness, where the pilgrims followed to hear the words of that Master, of whom it was said "Never man spake like this man," with the age-old spirit again incarnate in certain Members of this House there were those who came to the Master saying: "This is a desert place, and the time in now past; send the multitude away that they may go into the villages and buy themselves victuals." But Jesus was moved with compassion and said, "They need not depart; give ye them to eat."

So we for the moment having some small part, which should not be ignoble, in the life of our country may follow afar the Master. Where this Capitol stands in all its majesty, the visible expression of American ideals carved in lasting marble, through the velvet turf of its setting spring up fragile blossoms that gladden the hearts of little children.

It is not ignoble to minister to the hunger of the human body. This has been the happy ministration of woman, the expression of wifely or maternal solicitude since wisdom came to Eve, and she sought to regain Eden in the approbation of those she loved. Women are watching this House as never before. If necessary, others who follow me will be ready to make themselves heard.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the gentleman think it very wise to continue the restaurant running during the recess of Congress, as often it does run, for a month or more after we leave here?

Mr. IRELAND. I only partially agree with the gentleman——

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman from Illinois in his task, which is a hard one and which he is doing well, but the gentleman is supposed to be discussing the point of order. It seems to me that we have gone into these petty details as long as we ought to under the point of order.

Mr. IRELAND. I quite agree with the gentleman in respect to that, but will he not just indulge me for a moment or two more?

Mr. TILSON. I do not think there is anyone in the House who has the slightest notion that the gentleman has not conducted his office of chairman of the Committee on Accounts in the most efficient manner. He has had a very hard problem and he is solving it satisfactorily. We are in complete sympathy with the gentleman, and I think there is no use of attempting to explain things that nobody finds any fault with him about. [Applause.]

Mr. IRELAND. I would just like to tell the House in a general way that in addition to the profits shown under these conditions $10,150.23 was paid out for such things during the last year. Also we have wiped out a deficit of $7,500 which occurred prior to the time the present arrangement went into effect. We turned over to the Clerk on the 1st of last June a matter of $800, and we have perhaps fifteen hundred or sixteen hundred dollars of merchandise on hand.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not think the gentleman intends to leave the impression with the House that the 150 dozen napkins were stolen?

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, by no means, no; I tried not to give that impression. I tried to make that plain. That is what it took to run the restaurant in the single item of linen replacement.

Mr. KINCHELOE. As I understand the gentleman, it took that many to run the restaurant, to replace those that were misplaced or even stolen.

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; and worn out and wasted.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it not a fact that these napkins are laundered every day?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no criticism of the gentleman. I admire him as much as any other Member of the House. My whole point of order was made upon the foundation that this is an expense that we ought to bear through a commercial restaurant and not charge the taxpayers up with this money.

Mr. IRELAND. Very well. Let me answer the gentleman right upon that point. The statistics that the management keeps in the restaurant are very simple and very complete. The record shows that it is impossible to gain any sale on any single item on the bill of fare that costs more than 55 cents. It is also true that against my protests—or, at least, not at my suggestion—we paid $4,200 of the bills of the man who had the restaurant under private management just prior to this time. Serving one meal a day, it is impossible to operate the restaurant at a profit. I have been convinced of that against my will. This system is the only one that even approaches a satisfactory arrangement to Members, and you can follow this or discontinue all restaurant service entirely.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, Rule IX of the Senate Rules provides:

> The large private room of the restaurant shall be reserved exclusively for Senators and their guests.
> The small private room shall be reserved exclusively for the use of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, and such use of the private rooms of the restaurant shall not be interfered with.
> The viands served in the restaurant shall be of the best quality, and the prices for the same shall not exceed those stated in the printed bills of fare, to be previously approved by the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and said prices shall be subject to modification from time to time as the chairman of the Committee on Rules may direct.
> The restaurant shall be kept open during the session of the Senate and during such other parts of the year as the Committee on Rules may direct.
> * * * The management of the restaurant and all matters connected therewith shall at all times be subject to such further directions as the Committee on Rules may give.

Obviously that rule contemplates that a restaurant shall be operated in the Senate under the direction of the Committee on Rules of the Senate. It might be operated under a concession, or it might be operated by the Committee on Rules, by the hiring of a caterer or some other way, as this rule obviously contemplates. You can not run a restaurant without repairs, improvements, equipments, supplies. You can not run it without personal and other services. It seems to me that this provision under the rules of the Senate is clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been repeatedly held that a resolution passed by a preceding House of Representatives justifies an appropriation. The Senate rule, in the codified rules of the Senate, which may properly be described as the organic law for the operation of that body, would have an even more binding effect than a mere decision or resolution of the House. The paragraph contained in the lines 12 to 17, on page 9, in lines 15 and 16, has the following language:

> to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules.

That would be held to be legislation if it were not for the fact that in the rule quoted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], Rule IX of the Senate, there is this provision:

> The management of the restaurant, and all matters connected therewith, shall at all times be subject to such further directions as the Committee on Rules may give.

That is a provision for the operation of the Senate restaurant by the Committee on Rules, which clearly offsets any objections to the language in the paragraph just read.

It seems that the Senate has full authority under the rules for the operation of this restaurant, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

The Chair at this time will also dispose of the point of order to line 1, page 9, made by the gentleman from Texas, with reference to packing boxes. This matter was up before in the House and held out of order in the bill of last year by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL], who was then the occupant of the chair. His decision was appealed from and reversed by a vote of 23 to 1. The present occupant of the chair is of the opinion, in view of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Mann, and other gentlemen who took part in that debate, that the purchase of packing boxes is just as much in order under the rules of the Senate and money can be supplied out of the contingent fund with the same propriety as for the purchase of fuel or any one of one hundred other items provided for out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The Chair therefore overrules that point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK.

Salaries: Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $6,500; Chief Clerk, $4,500; journal clerk and two reading clerks, at $4,000 each; disbursing clerk, $3,400; tally clerk, $3,300; file clerk, $3,250; enrolling clerk, $3,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent; chief bill clerk, $3,000; assistant to Chief Clerk, and assistant enrolling clerk, at $2,500 each; assistant to disbursing clerk, $2,400; stationery clerk, $2,200; librarian, $2,100; assistant librarian, $2,000; assistant file clerk, $1,900; assistant librarian and assistant Journal clerk, at $1,800 each; clerks—1 $1,800, 3 at $1,680 each; bookkeeper, and assistant in disbursing office, at $1,600 each; 4 assistants to chief bill clerk, at $1,500 each; stenographer to Clerk, $1,400; locksmith and typewriter repairer, $1,300; messenger in Chief Clerk's office, and assistant in stationery room, at $1,200 each; 3 messengers, at $1,100 each; stenographer to Journal clerk, $1,000; 9 telephone operators, at $900 each; 3 session telephone operators, at $75 per month each from December 1, 1923, to June 30, 1924; substitute telephone operator when required, at $2.50 per day, $500; laborers—3 at $900 each, 9 at $720 each; allowance to Chief Clerk for stenographic and typewriter services, $1,000; purchase, exchange, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor vehicle, $1,200; in all, $106,145.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order upon the paragraph in order to ask a question. In line 11, page 11, it authorizes the purchase of motor vehicles. The Clerk, as I understand it, now has a Ford chassis upon which he has had built a homemade truck body. It may not be a Ford; as to that I have forgotten, but it is now in use. Now, the question is of spending $1,200 more.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, that was a machine, as I understand it, which was turned over to the House by the War Department, a 1917 model, a Dodge car, which has run a great many miles. If the gentleman has run an automobile himself he knows that it does not pay to run an automobile very much longer than five years.

Mr. BLANTON. I have had my old Studebaker car repainted for $50 and I am using it still.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will venture the assertion it is not five years old. The gentleman knows it does not pay to run a car over five years. This simply contemplates the purchase of a new chassis for——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says it is a Dodge car. He can turn this chassis back to the Dodge people and get a new chassis. The Clerk said if he could buy a new chassis he would put this body on it. That is what the Clerk said in the hearings. He could exchange this present chassis back to the Dodge people for a new chassis at considerable less than $1,200.

Mr. ANDERSON. He has to operate it, maintain it. Even a Dodge car will not run without gasoline and oil.

Mr. BLANTON. Operation and maintenance—we are going wild on operation and maintenance. I use an automobile as much as any Member of Congress in going to the different departments every day almost, and I live 5 miles from the Capitol. I use my automobile in going back and forth, and the maintenance of a Studebaker car—that is, general repairs, for gasoline and oil—the bill will not average over $25 a month.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman has a miracle car if that is the case.

Mr. BLANTON. My Studebaker car costs me about $25 a month, or an average of $300 a year, to maintain it.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman wants to make a contract to pay the expenses on my car at $300 a year, I will give it to him right away.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to pay for a car that might run into a ditch some time and get broken up. I do not drive my car that way. I know that our Clerk of the House is one of the finest men in the world. If he thinks it will cost this sum for maintenance and to pay the exchange price for a new chassis, I have no objection to the item; but unless he does feel it is necessary, I do not think we ought to appropriate for it in this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it is necessary. I think it is economy to exchange this car for a new one.

Mr. BLANTON. That is, it will not be in addition to the present truck; we are only providing one motor car for the Clerk?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is my understanding.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the words "Auditor, $3,000," line 16, in order to ask the gentleman——

Mr. ANDERSON. That is authorized by law, and I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] states that he does not need him any more and he is going to ask to strike out that item.

Mr. IRELAND. If the gentleman will allow me the privilege of looking after my own committee, I would like to strike out line 16, page 11——

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Who has the floor, may I inquire?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. IRELAND. I move to strike out, in line 16, page 11, the words "Auditor at $3,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a question of order. Has the point of order been withdrawn or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order has not been withdrawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then no amendment can be offered. An amendment is not in order as long as there is a reservation of a point of order.

Mr. IRELAND. The Chair recognized me and did not recognize the gentleman from Texas. I do not think his point of order is in order.

Mr. BLACK. The point of order was reserved and I was asking a question of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON]. I usually try to be courteous to the Members of the House, and I do not appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois. I had not intended to make a point of order if it was authorized by law, or even if some good reason were shown by the chairman as to why we should have this new position. I take it the gentleman was rather premature in the remarks he made.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I want to say, and I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. IRELAND. The emergency for the position will have passed by that time. Should it again occur, as it may, it can again be handled as it was before. But it is not a continuing necessity, and I move to strike out that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IRELAND: Page 11, line 16, strike out "auditor, $3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Why would the committee want to change the system that existed before?

Mr. IRELAND. The system is in no way changed, but requires less clerical assistance, because we have caught up with our business. This arrangement was originally necessitated by the change in handling Western Union business in regard to keeping track of telegrams, and also as to the restaurant matter, but we now have our business brought up to date and the need will, I hope, no longer exist. Ordinarily the complement of clerks given to the Committee on Accounts is sufficient. Should the emergency again arise, I am sure the House will be as generous and reasonable in the matter as it was before. But to my mind it will not occur—I hope not, at least—and as a proof of that I have laid off one clerk from the committee now.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I will say to the gentleman that I was not consulted about it, although I am a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman would have been consulted if it had been known that he desired to be. No one was consulted. No one else was familiar with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 12, lines 1 and 2, after the figures "720" in line 1, strike out the language "Disposition of Useless Executive Papers—clerk, $2,000."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not criticize the Committee on Appropriations for including this item in an appropriation bill, because it is authorized by law. It may be that this is a very important committee. Probably under the present administration there are a great many useless executive papers to be disposed of. But I have made this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the real need for reorganizing the clerkships of these different committees.

I have no doubt that some of the committees included in this paragraph need all the clerks that are provided for. I am making these remarks without having looked up to see who is the chairman of this Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers. My remarks are wholly impersonal. I have selected this particular committee not because it is the only one in the paragraph which I think is unnecessary. There are others.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. As I read this paragraph, it seems to me there are at least 15 committees in that list that would need a clerk less than the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers. I am not the chairman of that committee, and I do not have in mind who is.

Mr. BLACK. I do not have him in mind, either.

Mr. TILSON. But evidently, if the work of that committee is to be done well, there ought to be a very good clerk; one who, when he goes over the papers, can know what is of value and what is not; and it seems to me that if this committee does its work well, it certainly ought to have a clerk, and a good one.

Mr. BLACK. The reason why I call attention to the fact that the House has too many clerks to committees is this: Congress is very free in criticizing the executive departments of the Government for having unnecessary employees sitting around their offices doing nothing, and I think it is time that the House should take this matter in hand and have a real businesslike reorganization of its committees. Let us keep the employees who are necessary to do the work and dispense with those who are not. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to oppose the amendment offered. I am a member and chairman of that committee. The other member is Mr. ROUSE, of Kentucky. There are two members. In 1889 Congress passed an act forbidding the destruction of any papers in any department of the Government without the consent of the Congress. That act was passed by a Republican Congress during Cleveland's administration, and was revised and stiffened a little by a Democratic Congress during Harrison's administration.

The act can be easily found. Nothing can be destroyed without the consent of Congress. There is an enormous number of papers which have to be examined by Congress, the consent of which is required before any paper may be destroyed. The clerk of the committee is a woman, who must go to the various departments and examine these papers in the greatest detail to determine whether there are any that ought to be saved. The list of papers is sent first to the Librarian of Congress, and he has to pass upon the question as to whether any of them are of sufficient historic interest to be preserved. Then the list comes to our committee, and this young woman examines the papers in the various departments and reports to the committee such as ought not to be destroyed. In the first year during which this committee worked since I became a member of it we realized from the sale as waste paper of papers whose destruction we authorized the sum of $40,000.

There had been no work done by my predecessor, Mr. Talbott, and his committee for about 18 months, and there was an immense accumulation. In subsequent years there has been a sale of these papers to the amount of about $10,000 a year, of papers for which there was no use. There is still an enormous accumulation of papers, particularly in Philadelphia, which will have to be examined, and if that law is to be obeyed it seems to me that during the recess of Congress the clerk of our committee ought to go to Philadelphia and go carefully over these papers and let them be disposed of. The law is very plain. Nothing can be destroyed without the consent of Congress. The departments are littered up with stubs and with everything under the sun. I think there was an accumulation of over $100 worth of waste paper, consisting of applications for furloughs in the Navy alone, all of which had to be examined before they could be destroyed. It would seem to me that if we are going to abide by the law we ought to have that work done and done right, and that we will have to have it done. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman where that value of $40,000 came from? Was it the value of the old paper or was it value as documents?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. The $40,884 was realized from the sale of documents as waste paper, which had been examined by the clerk of our committee. In other words, the papers which had been examined by the clerk of our committee were sold as waste paper for that amount.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw my amendment. The gentleman has made a very interesting statement. It seems that the real work needs to be done in preventing the printing of such a large amount of these worthless documents. We could save a great deal of money if we would more carefully look after the printing end of it. In view of what the gentleman has said about the work of the committee, of course, I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For police force, House Office Building, under the Sergeant at Arms: Lieutenant, $1,200; 19 privates, at $1,050 each; in all, $21,150.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to add a brief explanation in regard to these waste papers. The Senate is now considering an appropriation of $2,500,000 for the erection of an archives building. It is very important that these inspections be made of the papers that are retained and those that are destroyed. There should not be any authority on the part of anyone to destroy public papers without some knowledge on the part of Congress as to the kind of papers that are destroyed. The reason for that is this: If they have the authority to destroy papers at discretion, they may destroy some papers of vital importance; and if a person who may have done something wrong could have that kind of privilege, he might destroy the very paper that would be needed to locate the responsibility for the wrongdoing. Moreover, it is very important that in the progress of business in the departments papers that need to be retained permanently for future reference, such as important contracts, certificates of settlements, warrants, and so forth, should be segregated from the papers that ultimately may be destroyed wisely. They should be filed separately under the same number, so that you retain permanently the material papers and have the papers separated which in the course of two or three or four years may very readily be disposed of without any risk to the Government. We will save the filing space of perhaps four-fifths. I should judge that four-fifths of the volume of papers handled by the departments in the form of vouchers and papers that will be of little value in the course of four or five years can be disposed of. If you retain all of them you must, of course, necessarily increase your filing space and thus have a larger archives building to take care of what you retain. I think that this law, with a congressional committee to supervise it from time to time, will hold the authorities in the departments in check and prevent the loss of a great many very valuable papers.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Janitors under the foregoing shall be appointed by the chairmen, respectively, of said committees, and shall perform under the direction of the Doorkeeper all of the duties heretofore required of messengers detailed to said committees by the Doorkeeper, and shall be subject to removal by the Doorkeeper at any time after the termination of the Congress during which they were appointed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he hopes to finish it this afternoon?

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like very much to do it, but I presume it will be impossible.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There are many pages yet to be read. I do not want to throw anything in the gentleman's way, but unless the gentleman would like to finish, I suggest that it is 5 o'clock.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman knows that Monday is District day. It is a long time since we have had a District day, and it is desirable if possible that the District legislation should be taken up Monday. I should like very much to finish the bill if gentlemen are willing to stay here and do it.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have looked carefully over this bill and have failed to find any appropriation for the amplifier and broadcasting apparatus in the House of Representatives. As far as the amplifier is concerned it may be a good thing. I do not know whether it is or not, but I do not think it is a good thing to have a broadcasting machine in the House of Representatives where it can be hooked up with a wireless station and some very pleasant things, I suppose, broadcasted to the people who want to listen in on it. Things have occurred on the floor this afternoon that might be an entertainment at a vaudeville show, but certainly would not be very edifying to the public who might be listening. If there is no authority for this machine, I think it ought to be taken out until the authority is granted by law. I do not know of any law that authorizes the installing of the machine. I do not know how it can be paid for. I do not see anything in this bill to meet the expense of it, and I think those who are responsible for the installing of this amplifier in this House should take it out until they have the authority of law to install it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing carried in this bill for the purchase or maintenance of the amplifier or the other apparatus that goes with it. I do not know under what authority the machinery was put in here. I assume, however, that consent was given for it by somebody. I understand that a resolution has been introduced and referred to the Rules Committee which involves an investigation into the desirability of providing such machinery permanently. So far as this bill is concerned there is nothing in it that authorizes or appropriates for the purchase or rental or other use of this machinery.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY]. I can see no reason why the Hall of the House of Representatives should be used for advertising purposes for any new kind of machinery. I know nothing about the value of these so-called amplifiers—the horns in the ceiling—but I do know from personal experience in watching the work of these little machines stuck around here in half a dozen different places about the room that they are a drawback rather than a benefit to the work of the House. You can stand in the rear of the room almost anywhere, if somebody is talking into one of these little frames, and every once in a while you can catch a brassy sound of the voice extremely disagreeable to the ear. It may help the gallery. I am not sure as to that, but I do not think we are here for that purpose. Since the machines have been put in, there has been a young man sitting permanently in one of the galleries, I understand, experimenting with the work here, seeing how these machines operate, for the benefit of some company by whom he is employed. Now, I do not think this is any place for that sort of experimental work, and for my part I am ready at this moment to vote to have the whole outfit taken out of here until such time as we may in an orderly way see fit to introduce them. What I am objecting to is this form of publicity of a very wonderful invention, evidently not yet perfected, but for which the House of Representatives is used for experience and experimenting.

They ought not to be here, Mr. Chairman, and I hope that the result of the remarks made by the gentleman from California will bring about their removal. If the amplifiers and these little round machines on the desks and tables belong to separate business concerns, they should both be asked to remove their property at once.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will state to the gentleman that I doubt very much, indeed, whether they could have been placed in here if it had not been by authority emanating from the gentleman's own State.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not care to answer the gentleman's insinuation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of interest to members it might be well enough to state the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] introduced a resolution a few days ago which was referred to the Committee on Rules authorizing the Committee on Rules to investigate the desirability of installing the amplyfying device. I do not understand that there has been any money expended by the Government on the installation. That resolution was acted upon favorably by the Committee on Rules, and I suppose in the proper time will be presented by the gentleman from Kansas to the House, and the House will then have an opportunity to determine whether it wants to authorize the committee to proceed with the investigation.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. In other words, a resolution has been introduced to authorize the doing of something that has been done in some other way.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I understand the matter, the amplifying device was installed at the expense of whatever company owns it. The Government has never paid anything for the installation. It is a question whether the House will accept it or not.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman from Tennessee know who authorized the installation. I suppose it would not have been put in unless somebody authorized it.

Mr. TREADWAY. It appeared here at the beginning of this session.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. There is no question before the House touching this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will read.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to complete the bill to-night as there are several items that will require some discussion, and I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-nine Members present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13926, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 193 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein certain resolutions passed this week by the American Legion in Indianapolis. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] to-day expressed his opinion with regard to our relations to our allies and our enemies in the late war. I should like to insert in the RECORD, with the consent of the House, certain resolutions that were adopted this week by the national executive committee of the American Legion which express the point of view of the men who fought the war with regard to those countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is that the resolution protesting against the refusal of the Republican organization to permit the consideration of a certain bill which some 250 Members asked the committee to report out?

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. It has nothing to do with anything of that sort. It has to do with the point of view of the Legion with regard to the attitude of France to-day in the Ruhr and with regard to the outcome of the war.

Mr. WINGO. The only resolution that I know they adopted last week was one criticizing the House leaders because they would not permit a certain bill to come out of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Resolution passed by the national executive committee, American Legion, at Indianapolis, Ind., U. S. A., January 15–16, 1923.

Whereas the Peace Conference following the World War and participated in by representatives of the majority of the nations of the earth, including the United States, determined, among other things, that Germany should pay certain reparations; and

Whereas, on April 27, 1921, the Reparation Commission in execution of article 233 of the peace treaty fixed the total amount of reparations due from Germany to all the Allies at 132,000,000,000 gold marks, which Germany, on May 11, 1921, accepted unconditionally, and France by agreement of the Allies was to receive 52 per cent of all reparations awarded, including certain deliveries of coal, lumber, and other payment in kind; and

Whereas within a short time after the acceptance of the reparations award Germany fell in arrears in the payment of money and in the delivery of material as provided by the treaty, and the people of Germany began to send out of the country gold, securities, and other forms of wealth and to seriously impair if not wreck the whole German financial system for the purpose of avoiding payment, and by evasion, trickery, and sundry devices sought to deprive France of the awards made by the Peace Conference and accepted by Germany, was on January 10, 1923, in default in the delivery of coal and lumber; and

Whereas for the purpose of securing compliance with the terms of the peace treaty France has now occupied certain territory in the Ruhr Valley: Therefore be it

Resolved by the National Executive Committee of the American Legion in session in the city of Indianapolis, United States of America, this 15th day of January, 1923, That the action of France in so occupying said territory was and is justified; that she is endeavoring by the only effective means to collect a debt which the majority of the nations of the earth have decreed she is justly and properly entitled to; that we approve her course in the premises and wish her success to the end that the wrongs endured and the damages suffered by her may to some extent be compensated, the fruits of victory enjoyed, and the war stay won: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to the French ambassador at Washington,

Whereas the youth of America in 1917 and 1918 offered all they had to bring peace, justice, and happiness to the world, and in that effort cooperated with their stricken allies; and

Whereas the lives and health of thousands of American boys were given to that holy cause; and

Whereas the peoples of the world are now torn and bleeding from the effects of the war and the consequent fears, distrusts, hates, and misunderstandings; and

Whereas the ex-service men of America still long to restore to the world peace, justice, and happiness, the things for which they fought and their comrades died; and

Whereas there remains in the heart of every ex-service man the memory of friendship and common service with our allies and also a desire to be generous to a defeated foe: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the national executive committee of the American Legion assembled at Indianapolis, Ind., expresses its hope that the cause of justice and world tranquillity for which their comrades' lives were sacrificed may continue to the good of our great country, and we respectfully request our Government to lend its aid as its good judgment may dictate to abate the world's crisis and assist in the establishment of peace on earth and good will to men.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of autosuggestion and the workings of the subconscious mind as practiced by Emile Coue.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should be made a medical journal. I object.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his objection for one moment? I wish to do something useful——

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPECIAL AND MINORITY EMPLOYEES.

For the employment of Joel Grayson in the document room, $2,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 23, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point a minute?

Mr. ANDERSON. I reserve it for a minute.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Joel Grayson has been in the employ of the Government in this Capitol 48 years. He began as a page boy in this House in 1875. For years he has been in charge of the House document room. During those 48 years he has placed all of his earnings into a home, worth $15,000. He had a very fine library, worth as much to him as any man's private library. His home and library are all gone. He is one of the most faithful employees of the Government. He knows more about the document room and the documents, I dare say, than any man in Washington. He can give you the history of any piece of legislation or any public document at any time, and if you go there and ask him he can help you find any old document. Now, after serving for 48 years he lost his home the other day by fire. He did not have a dollar's worth of insurance. I do not know how that situation appeals to you gentlemen. He has not asked me to offer this amendment. It does not come from him, but it has come from his friends here in the Capitol. He has no knowledge right now that I have offered it. I do not know why they picked me out to offer it, unless it is because I have been in favor of economy; but I do say that if there is any man on earth entitled to this little raise in salary under the circumstances it is the man who has served his Government faithfully here in this Capitol for 48 years and is now in straitened circumstances because of his late affliction. I hope the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota will let this go by. I hope he will not make the point of order against it. There have been other big raises in this bill. There are other men who do not need it who are receiving larger raises in this bill. I hope the gentleman will let this amendment go by. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with what the gentleman says. I agree with what he says, but obviously this is not the place to do it. We have a Committee on Accounts to consider questions of this kind, and the question ought to be considered by this committee. There are a great many employees carried in this bill whose salaries, I think, are lower than they ought to be; but in fairness to the general policy that we have adopted it is my duty to make the point of order, and I do make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, why is it subject to the point of order? It is not a statutory provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas and others that this is fixed by resolution, and very much to the Chair's regret he is constrained to sustain the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment. On line 23, page 15, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 15, line 23, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of majority floor leader: Legislative clerk, $3,600; clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,500; janitor, $1,000; in all, $8,600.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I make the point of order, page 16, line 11, against that part of the paragraph which embraces "legislative clerk, $3,600"; it is a new position, unauthorized by law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will indulge me just a moment, I will say that on March 24, 1922, the House passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, for the services of a legislative clerk compensation at the rate of $3,600 per annum, the said clerk to be appointed by and under the direction and control of the majority floor leader.

That resolution clearly authorized the appointment of the employee until further provision is made by the House.

Mr. BLANTON. That is for the current fiscal year; it does not say "hereafter."

Mr. ANDERSON. It says, I will read again, "until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. BLANTON. I accept the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE STENOGRAPHERS.

Salaries: Four stenographers to committees, at $6,000 each; janitor, $980; in all, $24,980.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph, and I do this simply to ask a question of the chairman. It seems to me there is a discrepancy in the salaries of our stenographers. We recognize the fact that the reporters of debates here are the most expert men in the business, and if $6,000 is ample compensation for them—I am not saying that it is, possibly it should be more—but if it is, what is the reason that the four stenographers to committees also receive the same salary that these very expert men do here on the floor? It can not be claimed that the reporting of testimony before committees requires any such stenographic ability as is exercised or shown by the men on this floor. I also am confident their duties are not nearly as laborious. I am not making that statement in the nature of a criticism, only in the way of an inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition so as to reply to the gentleman. During the war, when the cost of living mounted very high, a resolution was brought into the House increasing the salaries of the Official Reporters of debates from $5,000 to $6,000, and which was passed. It was only a short time afterwards when, under methods adopted by the stenographers to committees, through pressure brought to bear on the Committee on Accounts, a resolution was reported to raise their salaries from $5,000 to $6,000. I opposed the resolution, but without any avail. I believed then and believe now the salaries of the Official Reporters of the House should be more than the committee stenographers, but for the last 30 years the salaries have been the same.

Years back, as during the first term I served, when the average length of the two sessions was only four months, the reporters of the House were employed only a fraction of a year, but now their time, like Members of Congress, is employed virtually the year round, and all the time under a tremendous grind, whereas the committee stenographers are only employed while committees are in session. The reason why their salaries are the same is nothing more than pressure on the part of the committee stenographers. If we should increase the salaries of the reporters to debates to $7,000, as I think they should be raised, the committee stenographers would come in very shortly afterwards and ask that they be put on a parity with the reporters of debates.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman was quite right in opposing this raise for committee stenographers. There is no question but what those salaries are more than what they ought to receive. It does not require the ability of a court reporter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is what I wish to call strongly to the attention of the House and to the country: That it is much more strenuous work and harder on the brain of the official reporters of debates to take down the speeches made here, with interruptions going on, than it is to take testimony in the quiet of a committee room. Men are wearing out. One of the official corps is quite ill because of the strain, and it is not to be wondered at when these official reporters of debates work for 11 months in the year under that tremendous strain from 12 o'clock until 5 or 6 and later six days in the week. I have enough of the milk of human kindness in me to prompt me to make that statement, although I have many times opposed increases of salary.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Has it ever been the policy that the Congress should make up an additional amount to be paid to the reporters here?

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, years back, when they did not have any permanent force to transcribe their reports, at the end of the session they were granted an additional amount for the expense they had incurred. As every Member knows, there is a relay of reporters, each one taking notes for five minutes and then taking them downstairs and immediately dictating them into a dictaphone. Years back they had an allowance only. Now their expert transcribers are allowed an annual salary.

Mr. FESS. My question is whether $6,000 covers all that the reporters get?

Mr. STAFFORD. It does.

Mr. FESS. I thought that an additional sum was made up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. Years back they were voted an additional sum to pay for their assistants, but now we have put them on the permanent roll.

Mr. SISSON. They get an extra thousand dollars now, do they not?

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I differ from my colleague on the committee as to their getting any extra pay.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not a fact that the committee stenographers do make extra money? Is it not a fact that they sell copies and make extra money, which the reporters here in the House are not able to make? I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not there is any kind of supervision or control over these men, whether they spend an equal amount of time on work which does not pay—that is, on work on which they can not sell extra copies?

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the committee stenographers, at the time when their work is at its peak, are engaged all the time. Indeed, they can not do all the work, and they employ extra men, who are paid by the Government. If there are any perquisites added to their salaries from the sale of copy it does not interfere with the performance of their committee work. But take for example to-day, with the House reporters busily engaged all day, the committee reporters are not occupied and will not be much occupied during the balance of the session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to lines 13 and 14 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to lines 13 and 14, on page 17, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE HOUSE.

For wrapping paper, pasteboard, paste, twine, newspaper wrappers, and other necessary materials for folding, for use of Members, the Clerk's office, and folding room, not including envelopes, writing paper, and other paper and materials to be printed and furnished by the Public Printer upon requisitions from the Clerk of the House, under provisions of the act approved January 12, 1895, $10,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last line there for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to inquire whether it is under this paragraph that the manila envelopes are obtained that are furnished to the Members for use in sending out documents? It may not be this item that covers it; I may be in the wrong pew. But I wish to criticize the quality of the paper furnished for manila envelopes and for the legal-size envelopes that we are obliged to use from our stationery accounts. They will not hold together to get from here to Massachusetts. I have had numerous experiences with these envelopes coming apart. I do not know whether it is under this item or some other item that this criticism should be aimed, but wherever it is, it seems to me we could get along with fewer envelopes and better quality. Whoever draws up the specifications for both the manila envelopes and the legal-size envelopes ought to revise them. I live fairly near, but some of the Members who live on the Pacific coast could not, I suppose, find a document at all after it has started on its journey. I do not see how they do their business with this quality of stationery. I have to instruct my office force in sending out a particular-size envelope to encircle it with a string or rubber band so as to hold together the articles that are in the envelopes. I do not know whether other Members have had that same experience or not, but we certainly ought to revise the specifications under which these envelopes are secured for our service.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this testimony as to general Republican inefficiency. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Wherever the words "during the session" occur in the foregoing paragraphs they shall be construed to mean the 211 days from December 3, 1923, to June 30, 1924, both inclusive.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the proposition, in line 12, for packing boxes, $4,500, that it is legislation, unauthorized by law, on an appropriation bill. There is no substantive law authorizing it. There is no rule of this House authorizing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled a similar point of order made by the gentleman with reference to packing boxes for the Senate. It was held in that instance that the item in question was properly chargeable against the contingent fund of the Senate, and the Chair can see no reason why a corresponding item is not properly chargeable against the contingent fund of the House. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture and materials for repairs of the same, including not to exceed $15,000 for labor, tools, and machinery for furniture repair shop, $30,000.

For packing boxes, $4,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this paragraph, because in this item of $190,000 there is embraced the appropriation for paying the $36,000 loss that the House of Representatives restaurant is run under annually.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman desire to interrupt me?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; I will ask for the floor when the gentleman has concluded.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no law that I know of authorizing it, other than a simple resolution that was passed here in the House. That is not the kind of law that should authorize the Government to go into the restaurant business. There is no rule of law that I know of that authorizes the Government to engage in the restaurant business in the Capitol, when the only evidence we have—the last evidence taken—is that it would cost the Government $36,000 a year in losses.

It should take a substantive law to permit the Government to engage in the restaurant business, whether it is run under the authority of the House of Representatives or by somebody else; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph embracing that project is unlawful on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, of course there is nothing in the language of the item itself—which, after all, is controlling in the case—which is subject to a point of order. However, it is unnecessary to rely upon that fact to sustain the opposition to the point of order made against the item on account of expenditures made in the House restaurant. If my friend from Texas would apply his zeal in making these points of order to an examination of the statutes, it would save a lot of the time of the House. A resolution passed by the House on June 2, 1921, provides for the payment out of the contingent fund of the House of such sums as may be necessary to make alterations and improvements in the House restaurant, and then it ends up with this language—

That until otherwise ordered by the House the management of the House restaurant and all matters connected therewith shall be under the direction of the Committee on Accounts.

A resolution adopted during this session or the last session provides that pursuant to the authority of the resolution adopted by the House June 2, 1921, the resolution I have just read, placing the management of the House restaurant and all matters connected therewith under the direction of the Committee on Accounts, there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, under regulations prescribed by said committee, such expenses as may be incurred in excess of those defrayed from the proceeds of same for the employment of absolutely necessary assistance in the conduct of such restaurant by such business methods as may produce the best results consistent with economic and modern management.

Clearly that resolution authorizes the payment out of the contingent fund of the House of such deficits as may be incurred in the operation of the restaurant of the House. Even if that item were specifically provided for here—and it is not—it would be clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has stated the case correctly. There is nothing in the paragraph specifically mentioning the restaurant or any deficit arising therefrom. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 18, line 18, strike out "$190,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$154,000," and add the following proviso, to wit: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in conducting a restaurant for the House of Representatives."

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point of order that this is a change of existing law, the resolution of the House now authorizing the conduct of the restaurant.

Mr. BLANTON. There can be a law authorizing the restaurant, and yet Congress can refuse to appropriate for it.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman's resolution goes further than that.

Mr. BLANTON. We might have a law authorizing a restaurant, and yet we could provide that no part of this money should be expended for that purpose. The gentleman's point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas is clearly a limitation within the purview of the rule, and the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota is overruled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am not making any criticism. I am just trying to stop a practice that is growing, and one for which sooner or later our people are going to hold us responsible. I just put it up honestly and fairly to my colleagues whether or not they are willing to go home to their people and take that hearing and read them what occurred when the chairman of the subcommittee asked the Clerk of the House, Mr. Page: "So, then, this restaurant is costing the Government $35,000 a year above the income?" And Mr. Page said, "No; $36,000."

Are you willing to take that home to your people and tell them about it and tell them that you are conducting a restaurant here for our benefit in the House of Representatives at a cost of $36,000 a year to your taxpayers, who are staggering now under the expenses of the Government? Of course, if you are willing to do that, why, then, pass this provision. It is in the bill, and you can vote down my amendment; but if you feel that your people at home do not want you to do that, why not stop it now? That restaurant could be let to a practical restaurant keeper. I do not know whether this would be deemed discourteous or not, but because she has done it so successfully in the past, if we could prevail upon our good colleague to take charge of that restaurant in a commercial way, and show her every consideration that was possible, she could take it and run it on a business basis and stop this loss of $36,000 annually, and I would be willing to have that done; but we are now running it at an expense to the people of $36,000 a year. There is no question about the matter of cost to the people of the country. Are we going to continue to do that? If you vote my amendment down, I am not going to fall out with you. I shall take it that you are doing what you think is right. I shall bow to your vote, if you do that. I am just merely doing what I conscientiously believe to be my duty to the people of this country. They want to stop unnecessary expenditures. I believe every one of my colleagues is willing to pay for what he eats. You are not the kind of men who want the people to pay for your meals. Then why not let us stop this? I just leave it up to you.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to take the time of the House in discussing what has already been passed over. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] offered a similar amendment sometime ago and it was defeated, and now he tries to bring it in again. I do not question the gentleman's conscientious objection to the management of the restaurant downstairs. All I can say is that he is mistaken in his premises. If my business experience of a lifetime is of any value to the membership here, the restaurant downstairs can not be run and be patronized by Members of the House and by such of the public as come in here and show a profit in any way, shape, or manner. It is an impossible task. The moment you charged prices sufficient to pay your overhead and the various losses that have been referred to here this afternoon, together with the cost of the food, you would not get a customer, not one. The question is simply this: Is the time of the membership of the House worth anything? If it is, you ought to have a restaurant in this building where Members can go and get a decent meal. I have been a Member of Congress for some years, and the food in this restaurant until within the last six months or a year, until the time we authorized it to be watched and carefully guarded, the food has not been good. Since the Committee on Accounts, under the efficient chairmanship of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND], took over the unpleasant routine is the only time that we have had a good restaurant. He is entitled to our thanks, not criticism. There must be some expenditures charged against the Government. Here are 435 Members of the House who are entitled to a midday meal. Are you going to adjourn the session at half past 12 and take an hour off to go somewhere outside, patronize some hotel or restaurant, or are you going to have it convenient for Members to get their lunch right here and attend to their duties at the same time?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The RECORD ought to show that the Members of the House, as well as the public, pay for what they get, and all it is worth.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have no fault to find with the gentleman's statement in that particular; in fact, I entirely concur.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the statement of the gentleman from Texas might leave the impression that we are beneficiaries.

Mr. TREADWAY. We are not beneficiaries; we are being charged the going price for similar food elsewhere. The trouble is that you can not carry on a business of this kind with one meal a day, and perhaps sometimes not that meal. It is so uncertain that no experienced caterer would take the chances—some days one meal, some days perhaps two, and many days none. There is a loss in that respect. There is a tremendous overhead loss that you have to meet. There are innumerable things that I could show you, if I had the time, where there is a loss. I doubt if there is a hotel in Washington to-day that can break even on the restaurant. They do not expect to break even.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We will be here until probably half past 7 to-night, to-morrow is Sunday, and to-morrow there will be no meals served at all, and they have to take care of emergencies of that kind.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will simply take the time to reiterate that the business of a restaurant conducted on one meal a day, and that very uncertain, for six days a week, can not break even at commercial prices. The present method of conducting the restaurant is the most satisfactory and in the long run the most economical for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and on a division there was 1 aye and 67 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice, in lines 16, 17, and 18, page 18, reference is again made to the official stenographers of committees. We have discussed their salary, and if we had not passed over that item I am disposed to think that the salary of those stenographers would have been reduced. I would like to inquire what the item "including reimbursement to official stenographers to committees for the amounts actually and necessarily paid out by them for transcribing hearings," has reference to?

We are paying these men a salary of $6,000 a year. Are they not capable of transcribing their notes without outside employment of additional service? I do not know what the amount of the item is, as the various sums are not separated. The reports of hearings are not returned promptly, and frequently there are many inaccuracies. The leading Member on the Democratic side on the Ways and Means Committee was finding fault the other day in regard to the return of reports of testimony. I have heard other gentlemen find fault. They are not the skilled and accurate stenographers that we have on the floor of the House, and we ought not to pay them as much salary as the official reporters of the House, and then pay them in addition to that. I do not see why we should pay them extra for transcribing their own work.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend her remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts with reference to the necessity of providing in this item for the reimbursement to the official stenographers to committees for the amount paid out for transcribing hearings. These hearings are dictated to a dictaphone by the stenographer and transcribed, and this is to reimburse them for the amount paid out for the transcription. It saves time and money, and is economy for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage stamps: Postmaster, $250; Clerk, $450; Sergeant at Arms, $300; Doorkeeper, $150; in all, $1,150.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of autosuggestion and the working of the subconscious mind as practiced by Emile Coué, and also as practiced by the real scientists.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, are these the gentleman's own remarks and the result of his investigation in the art of autosuggestion?

Mr. KINDRED. I will say to the gentleman that the remarks will be confined to my own investigation, observation, and personal experience, which has been rather large.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, Mr. Chairman, if they are the gentleman's own remarks I have no objection.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to ask the gentleman to what school he belongs, the Nancy School or the Zurich?

Mr. KINDRED. I belong to the school of Bernheim, of Nancy, who first, 35 years ago, investigated this subject and laid the foundation for its scientific investigation.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman in his remarks propose to discuss the difference between the Nancy school and the Zurich school?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, the much-advertised visit to the United States of M. Coué, the French pharmacist, and his methods have revived a great popular interest in an old subject, suggestion and autosuggestion, which have been known to and scientifically practiced by the medical profession even before the sixteenth century, when a physician by the name of Paracelsus popularized this means of curing disease.

No department of psychical research is at present exciting so widespread an interest as that which has been known under the name of hypnotism, suggestion, and autosuggestion, animal magnetism, mesmerism, and so forth, and inquiries are constantly made by those to whom the subject is new regarding its nature and effects, and also how, if at all, it differs from the mesmerism, animal magnetism, electrobiology, voodooism, witchcraft, and so forth, of centuries ago.

From the remotest periods of human history to the present time certain peculiar and unusual conditions of mind often associated with abnormal conditions of the body, have been observed, which have been cured by so-called mesmerism, hypnotism, suggestion, or autosuggestion.

The Egyptians and Assyrians had their magi, the Greeks and Romans their oracles, the Hebrews their seers and prophets, every great religion its inspired teachers, and every savage nation had, under some name, its seer or medicine man.

Socrates had his demon, Joan of Arc her voices and visions, the Highlanders their second sight, spiritualists their mediums and "controls."

Until a little more than a hundred years ago all persons who were supposed to be endowed with this sort of supernatural power were considered to be divine, and those under external and supernatural influence were considered as satanic.

About 1773 Mesmer, an educated German physician, philosopher, and mystic, commenced the practice of curing disease by means of magnets passed over the affected parts and over the body of the patient from head to foot. Afterwards, seeing Gassner, a Swabian priest, curing his patients by command and applying his hands to the affected parts, he discarded his magnets, concluding that the healing power or influence was not in them but in himself; and he called that influence animal magnetism.

Mesmer also found that a certain proportion of his patients went into a sleep more or less profound under his manipulations, during which a sort of somnambulism, or sleep walking, appeared. But Mesmer's chief personal interest lay in certain theories regarding the nature of the newly discovered power or agent and its therapeutic or curative effects.

He brought about the hypnotic sleep by means of passes, he and other practitioners of this form of suggestive therapeutics never for a moment doubting that the influence which produced such sleep-like states was a power of some sort proceeding from themselves and producing its effect upon the patient.

In addition to the condition of sleep or lethargy, the following conditions were well known to the "early mesmerists": Somnambulism, or sleep walking, catalepsy, anesthesia, and amnesia, or absence of all knowledge of what transpired during the sleep. Suggestion during sleep was also made use of, and was even then proposed as it has since been proposed, as an agent in education and in the cure of vice and disease, particularly in children.

This was the condition of the subject in 1842, when Braid, an English surgeon, made some new and interesting experiments. He showed that the so-called mesmeric sleep could be produced in some patients by other processes than those used by the early mesmerists; especially could this be accomplished by having the patient gaze steadily at a fixed brilliant object or point, without resorting to passes or manipulations of any kind.

He introduced the word hypnotism, which has since been generally adopted; he also proposed some new theories relating to the nature of the hypnotic sleep, regarding it as a "profound nervous change," and he still further developed the idea and use of suggestion. Otherwise no important changes were made by him in the status of the subject.

The period of twenty-five years from 1850 to 1875, was a sort of occultation of hypnotism.

In 1877 Professor Charcot, then one of the most scientific, most widely known, and most highly esteemed of living physicians and neurologists, not only in France but in all the world, was appointed, with two colleagues, to investigate the treatment of hysteria by means of metallic disks—a subject which was then attracting the attention of the medical profession in France.

Curiously enough, it happened that Charcot commenced exactly where Mesmer had commenced a hundred years before. He experimented upon hysterical patients in his wards at La Salpetriere, and, as a result, he rediscovered mesmerism under the name of hypnotism, just a century after it had been discovered by Mesmer and disowned by the French Academy.

But Charcot, after having satisfied himself by his experiments, did not hesitate to announce his full belief in the facts and phenomena of hypnotism, and that was sufficient to rehabilitate the long-neglected subject. The attention of the scientific world was at once turned toward it, and hypnotism at once became respectable and occupied the attention of many scientific physicians. From that time to the present it has formed one of the most conspicuous and interesting subjects of psychical study and research; it has become to psychology (the science of the normal mind and its functions) what determining the value of a single character is to reading an ancient inscription in a lost or unknown language; it is, in fact, a bit of the unknown expressed in terms of the known and helps to furnish clues to still greater discoveries, in the direction of unfolding the depths of both the conscious and the unconscious mind.

Soon after the experiments of Charcot and his associates in Paris were published, Professor Bernheim commenced a most thorough and important study of the subject in the wards of the hospital at Nancy, France. These studies were made, not upon persons who were already subjects of various forms of nervous disease, as was the case with Charcot's patients, but, on the contrary, upon those whose nervous condition was perfectly normal, and even upon those whose general health was perfect. Bernheim's work was associated with and preceded by that of Liebeault.

The result of Bernheim's experiments proved that a very large percentage of all persons, sick or well, could be put into the hypnotic condition—could be influenced by autosuggestion or suggestion. He claimed that suggestion was the great factor in bringing about the condition, and also in the mental phenomena observed, and in the cures which were accomplished.

He showed, moreover, that the hypnotic sleep did not differ from ordinary sleep, and that no magnetism nor other personal element, influence, or force entered in any way into the process—it was all the power and influence of suggestion on the unconscious or the subconscious mind.

To illustrate the method, a simple case would be as follows (Bernheim):

A patient comes into the physician's office complaining of continual headaches, general debility, nervousness, and unsatisfactory sleep. She is willing to be hypnotized, and is accompanied by a friend. The physician seats her comfortably in a chair, and, seating himself opposite her, he takes her thumbs lightly between his own thumbs and fingers, asks her to look steadily at some convenient object—perhaps a shirt stud or a specified button upon his coat. Presently her eyelids quiver and then droop slowly over her eyes; he gently closes them with the tips of his fingers, holds them lightly for a moment, and she is asleep.

He then makes several slow passes over her face and down the front of her body from head to foot, also some over her head and away from it, all without contact and without speaking to her. He lets her sleep 10 or 15 minutes—longer, if convenient—and then, making two or three upward passes over her face, he says rather quickly: "All right; wake up."

She slowly opens her eyes, probably smiles, and looks a little foolish at having slept. He inquires how she feels. She replies: "I feel remarkably well—so rested—as though I had slept a whole night." "How is your head?" (Looking surprised.) "It is quite well; the pain is all gone." "Very well," he says, "you will continue to feel better and stronger, and you will have a good sleep at night." And so it proves. Many diseases—functional—may be cured in this manner by autosuggestion.

This power is in the subconscious mind, or the subliminal self, and suggestion is the key to its action, yet a very large experience has taught that the reason suggestion is the key to the action of the subconscious is because through suggestion we create an expectancy upon the part of the subconscious. If we stop short of creating that expectancy, we fail to produce results. Many times mental and audible suggestions are given to no avail because they did not create the proper degree of expectancy.

Autosuggestion or hypnosis did not create the subconscious mind nor the power, therefore they are present whether one is hypnotized or not. The power to hypnotize or cause autosuggestion does not, therefore, exist in the operator except so far as he may employ the proper method to bring it about. The state brought about by autosuggestion is a state where the subconscious mind is in full possession and we obtain no phenomena without suggestions being given to the subconscious mind.

It is interesting to note that our own redoubtable Benjamin Franklin made an investigation of the subject of "animal magnetism" in the year 1837 and reported the findings of the investigating commission headed by himself in an interesting volume translated from the French, entitled "Animal Magnetism, etc." This report showed a profound investigation of the subject. It gives credit to Doctor Maxwell, an American physician and investigator of that period, for having written a most complete and copious treatise on the subject, in which he endeavored to support the doctrine of animal magnetism by calling in the assistance of the theory of the universal spirit which he had derived from the earliest philosophies of antiquity and which theory had already been presented by Mesmer about 1778.

Quoting from Maxwel's treatise, as bearing upon the power of animal magnetism or modern hypnotism to influence persons to improper actions: "Far be it from me," says Maxwel, "to lead you to improper actions. If from the perusal of my work you become acquainted with the means of such actions, you will do me the justice not to divulge them." "I have seen," added he, "the most incredible effects and greatest advantages from the right use of this method. I have also seen infinite evils occasioned by the use of it. Indeed, it is scarcely prudent to treat of these subjects on account of the dangers that may result from it. If we were to express ourselves in a manner universally intelligible, fathers could never be sure of their daughters nor husbands of their wives; women would be deprived of their self-government in spite of the most judicious and obstinate resistance."

These observations of Maxwel suggest a controversy that was waged between hypnotists a few years ago as to whether persons could be so influenced by hypnotic or other suggestion as to be unable to resist, even when they will to resist, sexual and other temptations.

In order better to understand the workings of the conscious and unconscious, or subconscious, mind as revealed in psychical researches, it is necessary to understand at least something of the material basis of mind.

It is exceedingly difficult to give a satisfactory definition or conception of an abstract mind or consciousness, but it is equally difficult to define or conceive of electricity. Yet we know the laws that govern electricity so well that we can trace its mechanism of connection with matter and use it in many practical ways. We may also trace the mechanism connecting mind and matter with as much accuracy.

Physiology teaches us that the connecting link between conscious mind and the material world is to be found in certain brain cells; that mind, in fact, is as much a creature of these brain cells as electricity is of the galvanic cell. Embryology shows how these brain cells precede the realization of conscious being, and produce as they mature step by step, first, muscular movements, then sensation of an automatic nature, and finally the higher faculties of conscious being, including normal and abnormal intellectuation.

This marvelous brain is composed of many groups of cells having different and more or less independent functions, and all these groups are closely connected by nerve fibers with all the organs of the body so as to form one harmonious whole. We know that most of these groups of cells at times go into an inactive or resting state, which we call sleep, and that this condition varies considerably in degree. Some of the causes of sleep and conditions of the cells during sleep are quite well understood. Physical changes that are well marked take place in the cell during its activity, and the normal condition is restored during sleep. It it also a well-established fact that some groups of cells may sleep while others do not, and that some groups or centers sleep more easily than others.

It is quite certain that the centers of consciousness to present surroundings are the first, as a rule, to fall asleep, and that some of the automatic centers, such as the heart and respiratory centers, are the most difficult to influence in this respect. Drugs, such as chloroform, opium, and alcohol, readily produce unconsciousness to present surroundings while memory is still awake and special senses and automatic centers still active. Pushed to a more advanced stage, these drugs finally overcome all the various centers, even those governing the heart and respiration.

The last centers to appear in the development of the brain are usually the first to sleep, whether this sleep be produced by natural or artificial means, as by hypnotism.

It is by putting to sleep various subcenters and leaving others active that the phenomena of hypnotism or hypnotic suggestion are produced, and it is due to the receptivity of these centers that the phenomena of suggestion are brought about.

Sir William Crookes has furnished a very plausible hypothesis for the explanation of telepathy or thought projection, often allied with the states already mentioned, by comparing it with wireless telegraphy. Nerve force is so much like electricity that we may readily believe brain activity capable of producing waves similar to the waves that make wireless telegraphy possible. And it seems within the bounds of reasonable probability to suppose that these waves of brain force may be appreciated by other properly tuned brains—however unusual—just as the wireless waves are appreciated by distant electrical apparatus properly tuned to receive them.

This hypothesis will explain the mind-reading stunts of Bishop, Cumberland, and other "sensitives" who are supposed to have developed an additional special sense. Liebault and Bernheim have shown that hypnotic subjects are at all times amenable to suggestion, and this does not in any sense imply weak-mindedness. Indeed, the weak minded and insane and those on the borderland of insanity are most difficult to hypnotize, because they have not the power of concentrating their attention, but it is a fact that most cases cured or benefited by autosuggestion and suggestion are essentially neuropaths.

Actual experiments and the history of therapeutic suggestions show that nearly all persons are more or less subject to the influence of suggestion, even while in their normal condition, and that the certainty with which suggestion acts will depend more upon the absolute faith with which it is received than upon any abnormal or artificial condition of the mind itself or power or characteristic of the operator or suggester. During hypnosis all forms of inhibition and rational objection are reduced to a minimum. The most absurd statements are received without question as facts, and for this reason produce powerful and lasting and baneful impressions. In fact auto-suggestion may cause as well as cure maladies, and this constitutes its great danger to the public, if it is left in the hands of ignorant or unprincipled practitioners.

Suggestion has been used as a therapeutic measure, with or without the aid of actual hypnotism, from the earliest times, and its history, under its various shapes and guises, forms one of the most interesting side lights for the study of human nature and the human mind.

Pure suggestion, with more or less impressive ceremony and paraphernalia, used to increase the faith of the patient, was undoubtedly the active factor of the incantations of ancient priests, the enchantment of the negroes, the cures of Indian voodoo doctors, the magic formulæ of Æsculapius, the sympathetic powder of Paracelsus, the king's cure, the cures at Lourdes, and by numerous saintly relics and waters. Astonishing numbers of cures of all imaginable diseases and conditions have been reported from these sources.

The classes of patients most susceptible to hypnotism, suggestion, and auto-suggestion, are as follows:

I. Those having self-limited diseases that will get well under any treatment that does not interfere with nature.

II. Cases that receive, in addition to suggestion, some appropriate medical treatment.

III. Cases of imaginary disease, having no real existence.

IV. Cases suitable for suggestive treatment, that are really cured.

V. Failures. A large class of which we hear little.

The first class (self-limited diseases) comprise most acute, and some chronic maladies, and includes more than half of all the diseases known to man.

The second class is not uncommon in the practice of osteopathy, botanic medicine, divine healing, etc., as the followers of such sects have frequently some knowledge of medicine.

Imaginary diseases are much more common than is generally supposed, and are often of a very serious nature. Patients frequently imagine heart disease, Bright's disease, or cancer but seldom imagine mild or trivial affections. It is also easy to produce imaginary diseases by suggestion, when there is a basis of even some slight ailment or pain to work upon.

The skillful quack who gains the confidence of his patient may easily make him believe he has cancer of the liver, aneurism of the aorta, or in fact any disease from infantile convulsions to senile debility, and may then proceed leisurely to cure him. The cure is usually as long as the patient's pocketbook; but if he is needed for advertising purposes, it may be remarkably short. There are few healthy persons who do not occasionally get a pain in the chest, back, or abdomen, due to trivial causes. The sickly man would pay no attention to such a thing. He is used to pain. But to the healthy man it is unusual and alarming. The assurance of a quack doctor may easily turn this pain into a pleurisy, nephritis, or appendicitis.

How skillfully the quack disseminates his circulars and newspaper advertisements with the idea of impressing such people. How many men can read the advertisement of a genius in this line without getting at least an uncomfortable feeling and a suspicion of some insidious, lurking disease? The imaginary disease is common, easy to produce, and often hard to cure.

The fourth class, or cases suitable for suggestive treatment, will be considered later.

The fifth class—failures—is a large and silent one, of which little is heard by the public. Yet every physician knows of one or two, and the aggregate is very large. These cases stray off to other quacks after a time, and usually come to a physician at last. Sometimes they come in time to be cured and sometimes not. Usually they come when turned off for lack of funds, and the real physician does what he can for charity's sake.

Thus, from the earliest days, suggestion has been used indiscriminately, unscientifically, and in a manner that savored always so strongly of quackery as to bring it into very bad repute. That it has done good can not be denied. While its bad repute has prevented reputable physicians from using suggestion openly as a therapeutic means, yet under other names and often unconsciously it has been used by them with great advantage. Every physician has some time given a placebo with good effect, though he may not have thought of it as suggestive treatment. Every respectable physician knows that his reputation is a great aid to him in curing diseases and that his personal influence or so-called personal magnetism is of great value. He is often unconscious of the fact that these things are of value because they make his patients believe in him and believe his suggestions.

But the time has come when the true value of suggestion should be known and its use placed upon a scientific and honest basis. We must know what diseases it may cure, what diseases it may aid in curing or alleviating, and how to use it. There are few classes of diseases that suggestion alone can cure, but the number of cases in the aggregate is large. It may be said that only imaginary diseases and functional diseases are amenable to this treatment alone, but in nearly all diseases suggestion is a valuable aid to other treatment. As I have already said, imaginary diseases are very common and often have a real foundation in dyspepsia, anemia, rheumatism, or some less serious real disease.

We are all familiar with the classic experiment of pretending to bleed a condemned criminal to death and actually causing his death, though no blood was really shed. This experiment shows the remarkable power of suggestion in producing illness. I have seen a number of cases near death from imaginary disease but have not seen any actually die. Hysteria is a common disease in which imagination plays so large a part that it might almost be considered as imaginary; but there is often a real basis for the symptoms in this and other functional disorders and sometimes in organic disease, such as a nervous form of gastrointestinal catarrh. We so frequently do find atonic dyspepsia and gastrointestinal catarrh associated with neurasthenia and hysteria that many have been inclined to regard the latter diseases as symptoms of the former, and more especially so from the fact that treatment which improves the digestive tract always results in coincident improvement of the nervous phenomena.

As is stated by the late Dr. W. P. Carr, of Washington, in his splendid article on "Suggestion as used and misused in curing disease":

> The legitimate method of the true physician is to have the real power of knowledge and use it with scientific accuracy. This is the slow and laborious way; but even the successful quack, who has left it under the temptation for quicker returns, often wishes himself back in the legitimate track, knowing that his career will be short. The day of bluffing in medicine is fast approaching its end. The man of real ability and honesty will gain a reputation for these qualities sooner than he thinks, and this reputation, once established, will go far toward giving him the confidence of his patients. If he will then display to them a kindly and sympathetic interest, the thing is done.
> Personal appearance has something to do with success in this line, but much less than is generally supposed. Many insignificant-looking men have succeeded remarkably well, but they have been men of unusual knowledge and force of character. The physician must listen with interest to symptoms and make careful examinations to assure himself of the actual conditions, and, no less, to assure the patient that he has done so. Then, if he finds only an imaginary disease, a simple assurance to that effect will be all that is necessary, provided he can make his patient believe it. Often he must admit a functional disturbance and proceed, by the suggestion of medicine and assurance of speedy cure, to make the sufferer believe, or, deeply rooted in his conviction, he will leave in disgust and go to another physician and another, until he finds one who will agree with him and treat him as long as he will come and pay.

The same author, not only a learned physiologist and psychologist but a surgeon of note, also says in the same article that tumors, especially of the abdomen, are frequently diagnosed by competent physicians when they either do not exist or shortly disappear.

And that in all diseases not purely or largely imaginary, suggestion should be used as an adjunct to other appropriate treatment and should be directed chiefly to the relief of fright, worry, pain, and sleeplessness, all of which are serious obstacles to digestion and nutrition, and, consequently, to resistance to germs and to the repair of lesions. These practical views on the practical and honest practice of suggestion may contribute much to the comfort and cheerfulness of the patient, to the shortening of the illness, and to the saving of life. Most physicians appreciate this fact and, consciously or unconsciously, apply it; but some of the brightest and otherwise best equipped do not, and are consequently failures. A hypodermic injection of water will often cause as profound sleep as one of morphia, if the patient believes it to be morphia, or will be equally effective in relieving pain. Simple assurances that sleep will come or that pain will cease are equally effective if believed.

It is usually unnecessary to deceive patients. A cheerful manner, an emphasizing of every point of improvement, a statement that everything is going on in a satisfactory manner toward recovery, that improvement is beginning and will soon be felt, that recovery may confidently be expected, as early assurance as possible that danger is past, all do much to cheer and improve and may be easily within the bounds of truth.

Complications and disasters should never be suggested, and should be treated as lightly as is consistent with honesty when they occur. At times actual deception is not only justifiable but is necessary to the saving of life or to even moderate comfort. But in such cases the family should always be informed of the true condition. Even in hopeless cases cheerfulness and comfort may be maintained for weeks, months, or years by constant cheering suggestions and by withholding unfavorable facts. It is indeed a cheerless condition that holds out no hope, and one that need seldom be encountered.

It is one thing, however, to assure a patient suffering from some dangerous disease that there is nothing the matter, and do nothing else to relieve him, and quite another thing to give him a somewhat similar assurance while doing everything possible to obviate the danger and bring about a cure. A clear distinction should be made between the medically ignorant person who would say to a typhoid-fever patient: "There is nothing the matter with you; there is no such thing as disease; you simply imagine you feel badly; you are well"; or who would pray for his recovery, expecting a miracle to be performed, and who, having no knowledge of medicine, does nothing for his relief—a clear distinction should be made between such a person and the educated physician, who would say: "You have fever; but if you will go to bed and take the diet and medicine or vaccine prescribed, you will recover; you will not be very ill; you will be better to-morrow; your headache will be better after a few hours' rest and a dose or two of medicine"; and who at the same time sees that these instructions are carried out by a good nurse, and that his patient has the best treatment known to science, and who intelligently watches every symptom as the case progresses, giving cheerful suggestions for all that are disagreeable, and never forgetting to use material means to remedy them or avoid them if possible.

DREAMS AND PSYCHOANALYSIS.

The significance from a psychic viewpoint of dreams and also certain psychoneroses have been in recent years studied by Janet, Freud, Brewer, and others abroad, and by Brill, of New York; Putnam, of Boston, and others in this country, by Freud's methods of psychoanalysis, meaning an analysis of the psychic make-up, in order to discover and successfully treat the hidden causes of certain mental and nervous diseases.

Freud's theory of psychoanalysis is summed up by the late Doctor Putnam as follows:

Whereas hitherto the most important cause of the functional psychoneuroses has usually been considered to be a constitutional and, in general, an inherited taint, and the influence of environment and education has been rated as of secondary significance, the facts point to a different conclusion. Our inheritance varies indeed within wide limits, but that which makes us sick or well—so far as the symptoms of these psychoneuroses are concerned—is the influences to which we are subjected after birth. This is not to depreciate the importance of what we bring with us to the world, but to exalt the significance of education taken in a wide sense. But if the influence of education, whether for good or ill, is to be exalted, it must be shown that these influences are to be given a broader meaning than that usually accorded to them; and, in so far as it is held that adult invalids are susceptible of cure through reeducation to a greater extent than others have believed, it must be proved that there are educational influences hitherto unrecognized or insufficiently recognized which can be called to aid in this work.

In support of both these propositions, Freud brings forward a remarkable array of evidence, based on the actual recitals of his patients. Some of these have been published by him or by his colleagues, while many others, for obvious reasons, have been withheld. These recitals are held to justify a number of subpropositions, such as those which follow, and as the result of my reading of the published communications, from personal conversations with Freud, and with his colleagues, and from my personal observations, I believe these claims to be well founded.

From birth onward our lives are builded on a double principle. We have ostensible personalities and concealed personalities, and though the two may harmonize fairly well they are never fully in accord. Society and our own choice and effort make us what ostensibly we are—artists, merchants, honorable citizens, persons following an aim. But in order to fit ourselves to molds of such a sort we must, of course, at every moment discard temptations and repress emotions out of harmony with this or that set purpose.

These emotions and temptations, in spite of being discarded and repressed, not only were but continue to be important portions of ourselves. They may never come to light again individually and in their own form, but at the least they contribute something, if only a note of seriousness, to our perceptions and our thoughts. When they do not help us to remember they may be forcing us to forget, and in reality these two results are often one. Even our discarded, repressed, forgotten childhood lives actively in our adult years, helping to form that variously named portion of our mental lives, of which we are not consciously aware, and can not make ourselves entirely aware except with special aid; never, perhaps, completely.

These repressed emotions and thoughts organize themselves more or less definitely into groups, and there is a constant interplay between them and the thoughts and emotions of our conscious lives. Thus, the repression of a desire gives rise to a vague sense of disquiet; and this feeling, attaching itself to a definite object, may be felt as a morbid impulse or a defined fear. The desire and repression may never, at best, have been more than half-conscious processes, and finally become wholly forgotten in the sense above described.

The vague distress is consciously felt as something unendurable, and is at once attached to a special object, as in obedience to an impulse which counts as "protective," although the relief afforded may be anything but complete. The fears of water, of the dark, of certain animals, of meeting people, of crowds, of church and theater, and so on through all their multitudinous forms, are made up in part, according to this view, of fears of ourselves, namely, fears engendered in the course of the effort to set aside a situation felt to be unbearable. Sometimes the whole process can be witnessed, as when a morbid fear of meeting people, or even a so-called misanthropy, arises out of the half-awareness that one has been living under conditions that were socially compromising. Often, however, the links of this chain pass wholly out of sight, and a person finds himself fearing or hating a person or set of persons without knowing why, when, in fact, it is because these persons stand as representing certain aspects of our past selves.

It is a little harder to explain the common fears of open windows, bridges, and the like, than fears of less external sorts, but there can be but little doubt that these also are at least partly due to a similar substitution. We would shine, we would be virtuous and recognized as such, consequently we fear to fall. "Natural" fear and symbolism do the rest.

M. Coué says, truly, that he has brought nothing new to the science of suggestion and autosuggestion, but he dwells on the importance of his method in applying autosuggestion.

His little book on autosuggestion, which has had an enormous sale in this country, having been bought by all classes, has eight chapters and subchapters, only one of which makes any pretense to the scientific discussion of the subject itself. All the remaining chapters are devoted to testimonials and praise of the author, very much in the form of testimonials and praise contained in patent medicine booklets and advertising. The only real feature of his first chapter is his suggestion, not new, that the imagination, rather than the will, controls our thoughts and actions, and that the imagination should therefore be chiefly invoked in making autosuggestion.

M. Coué, not a physician but a druggist, has pursued a sensational course, quite unlike the course of the real scientist and helpful physician just outlined; his methods, in fact, are much like those of the cheap showman, according to the newspaper and other accounts, making cheap, vulgar exhibitions of the misfortunes of the many neuropathic and susceptible persons who have been drawn to him because of his extensive newspaper notoriety and prestige.

In this connection the following public statement of Rev. Francis X. Doyle, S. J., professor of philosophy at Georgetown University, is very appropos:

In theory and in practice Doctor Coué's method of healing by autosuggestion is sound, but when he touches on the explanation of this theory he is absurd. You can practice Couéism with good results, but first go to the scientific medical man and let him dig for the trouble.

Since my object is to call attention to the decided limitations of all forms of suggestion and autosuggestion as well as to its possibilities in appropriate cases to be selected by the qualified physician only, I will refer in some detail to certain patients who have come within my own professional observation while I was a student at the medical department of the University of Edinburgh and a clinical assistant at the Royal Asylum there. A young man, 27 years of age, whose case I had the opportunity to study, came there to consult Dr. George M. Robertson, now the distinguished medical superintendent of that asylum, with a history of having been quite a normal young Scotsman, up to a few years previously. About four years previous to the time we saw him he quite accidentally went upon the platform "to be hypnotized," when a traveling hypnotist was giving an "exhibition" in the town where the young man lived. He soon came within the spell of this showman who commercialized hypnotic suggestion. The showman employed the young man as a "subject," who would easily do every stunt commanded, and the young fellow soon found that he was completely, at all times, under the hypnotic influence of his employer, who, finding the "show" business unprofitable, discharged his "subject." The two became separated and soon afterwards the young man found himself so slavishly obsessed by distant hypnotic suggestions of his former employer that he continued against his will and saner judgment, to do all kinds of things that he formerly did on the public stage while under the direct hypnotic spell, such as chasing imaginary pigeons, sweeping the floor with an imaginary broom, and so forth. His will power was gone and he actually did the most insane and grotesque acts in the midst of whatever work he might be doing, to such an extent that he became helpless and actually insane. There are many similar cases.

There are many other limitations of and contraindications to autosuggestion and suggestion, and such cases can be positively known only to a well-qualified physician, who knows that, for instance, if a hard lump on the breast of a woman at a certain age is temporized with under the soothing suggestion of M. Coué and other practitioners who are not even graduates in medicine that such a condition will soon become hopeless (the only hope being in a surgical operation before the cancer cells affect other parts of the body) and that the patient will surely die of cancer.

It is a fact that many avoidable deaths occur constantly in this country from diphtheria, typhoid fever, appendicitis, cancer, and other diseases because gullible and credulous though well-meaning patients and their friends and relatives do not call in reputable, licensed physicians in the diagnosis and scientific treatment of disease in the earliest curable stages of these diseases, but call in charlatans who pretend to cure all diseases by suggesting to the subconscious mind of persons gravely ill that no real illness exists or chiropractors or osteopaths who undertake to diagnose and cure all diseases by rubbing or by manipulating the spine or other parts of the body.

The cure of a limited number of diseases by suggestion, autosuggestion, psychoanalysis, or by rubbing, massaging, or manipulating the body may be brought about without risk to the public and the individual patient only when a trained, regularly licensed medical man has had every opportunity to find out the real ailment of the patient, to make a scientific diagnosis, and to suggest a proper course of treatment called for by each individual case.

Certainly every sensible person will admit the possible danger in any case of illness of failing to ascertain the real nature of the illness, so that timely and active scientific measures may be taken, as in cancer, diphtheria, appendicitis, and so forth. It is only by the exercise of such common sense that the lives of thousands of helpless children and others who die each year through such criminal neglect and ignorance may be saved.

The Clerk read as follows:

For driving, maintenance, repair, and operation of an automobile for the Speaker, $3,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the language in lines 1 and 2, on page 19, as legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the House by specific resolution authorized the purchase of an automobile for the use of the Speaker. Having authorized the purchase of the automobile, it clearly is in order to maintain it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the same point of order against this that he did against the automobile provided for the Vice President, and the Chair will make the same ruling. The point of order is overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistance rendered during the calendar years 1922 and 1923 in compiling list of reports to be made to Congress by public officials; compiling copy and revising proofs for the House portion of the Official Register; preparing and indexing the statistical reports of the Clerk of the House; compiling the telephone and Members' directories; preparing and indexing the daily calendars of business; preparing the official statement of Members' voting records; preparing and indexing questions of order printed in the appendix to the Journal pursuant to House Rule III; and for recording and filing statements of political committees and candidates for nomination and election to the House of Representatives pursuant to the campaign contribution laws, $5,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. WINGO were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 68.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, this discloses the fact that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13926, and finding itself without a quorum he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 136 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE DRAFTING SERVICE.

For salaries and expenses of maintenance of the legislative drafting service, as authorized by section 1303 of the revenue act of 1918, $40,000, one-half of such amount to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment by Mr. SISSON: Page 20, line 22, strike out all of lines 22 to 25, inclusive, and on page 21, lines 1 and 2.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, this is an activity which has never met with my approval. During the consideration of a tariff bill, Mr. KITCHIN being chairman of the committee, they got one or two of these gentlemen, and I think they wanted to keep them, but I never have been able to find any sort of justification for spending $40,000 for the purpose of having men draw bills for Members of Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In a moment. My objection is this: I do not believe when people elect Members of Congress, whose legislative mind they send here, they expect them to employ other people to do their thinking. I can not tell where such a proposition might end. I have always thought it was a very radical departure. I am not criticizing the Republican side of the House, because it is a matter that was inserted when the Democrats were in power, so that there is no partisanship about it upon my part. I think it is a step in the wrong direction. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, did it ever occur to the gentleman, active and industrious as he is, that his service in the House has been almost wholly in connection with appropriations; that he has not, as have Members who are on legislative committees, been charged with the responsibility of preparing and arranging general legislation. Let me give the gentleman an illustration of a service that I know of. I had in mind a general plan of legislation on a somewhat important subject, and I asked one of these gentlemen in. I outlined to him my thought, the line on which I thought the legislation should be drawn, and asked him if he would be good enough to prepare something along those lines. He did. His first draft was not exactly what we wanted, and there were a number of drafts.

But, first and last, while these gentlemen do not originate, do not propose, they do aid very greatly in properly framing that particular piece of legislation. They have been very busy, I think, during this Congress working for the various committees, helping the Members, expressing their thought in clear, definite, and concrete language. There are in these days experts in everything. These men are experts in legislative drafting.

Mr. SISSON. I know my friend does not want to take up what little time I have, and I must get some more if I need it. I do not believe, gentlemen, we are quite ready to substitute the minds of other people. I am unwilling to make the admission that if I have a piece of legislation that I think ought to become the law that I am incapacitated, that people who are elected in other districts are incapacitated to do their own thinking and prepare their own bills. Now, let me tell you that every man who is a lawyer knows that if you let the other man write the opinions of the judge you had better let that man be the judge. I want to tell you another thing. The man who is doing the writing, doing the preparation for the Member of Congress, ought to be the Member of Congress. I am unwilling to make the admission that the House of Representatives must have an expert legislative bill drafter to whom to go to draft bills. Here is the Legislative Reference Bureau here in the Library, and these things are beginning to grow very vigorously, and what is the difference? Why let a Congressman do his work; why let a Congressman be taken in a nice gilded carriage and brought over and carried in a nice gilded elevator and lifted into a nice gilded seat—why let a Congressman in this day and generation——

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. MILLER. I do not know where the gentleman gets the idea about a gilded carriage.

Mr. SISSON. That ought to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to have five minutes more, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that nearly every State in the Union has a legislative constitutional adviser. In the particular State I come from they have had him for 10 years.

Mr. SISSON. Does that account for the good or bad laws you have?

Mr. MILLER. The State averages up in intelligence to most of the States, and it is a very good thing. Nearly every legislative body has the same thing.

Mr. SISSON. I realize we are getting rapidly away from representative government. The old monarchial idea of having men to do this work is growing rapidly. I have not an idea of that kind. I still believe people are capable of electing Members of Congress who can do their own work. I know that the representatives of the people do good work.

I think Mr. Webster and Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Garfield and Mr. Hoar and men of that type did reasonably good work in their day, but I realize that our very puny, uneducated, unprepared Members of Congress in this day and generation have to have somebody to prepare their bills for them and to do their work for them. I do not know whether it is a fact or not that they can not do their own work, or whether it is simply indisposition on their part to do their work; but, in either event, I do not think it is an admission that we should be prepared to make.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Charman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I think every Member of the House will agree that the gentleman from Mississippi has been a very valuable member on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. Do not specialize simply on one committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. That is the matter with the gentleman's criticism. He does not appreciate the fact that every other committee of the House has a great deal of business to do, and I venture to say you can not find a single one—Ways and Means, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Judiciary, and so on—where all the members are ignorant men. I think the gentleman from Mississippi will agree that they are not ignorant men, men without capacity. But all of them agree that this legislative drafting service is a very valuable contribution to the work of Congress. [Applause.] Let me tell the gentleman from Mississippi one thing, and that is——

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I do not care to yield further to the gentleman. I yielded nearly all of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming, and he is capable of getting his own time. So is my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the next chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. I forgot for the time being that the gentleman from Texas is one of the reputed fathers of this legislative drafting service. I recall now that JACK GARNER and CLAUDE KITCHIN have had a controversy as to the fatherhood of that service. [Laughter.] But however that may be, I think it is either CLAUDE KITCHIN'S or JACK GARNER'S baby. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I think it is one of the few good things that the gentleman from Texas has done. Indeed, I think it is one of the very best things he has done.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the gentleman will leave out the word "few." [Laughter.]

Mr. SISSON. One of the objections I have to the civil service is that it is misleading so many of the official minds of the Government and getting us too far away from the people. I do not know whether the prophecy made by the English when we attempted to establish this form of government is going to be true or not, but I do know that in one sense we are getting farther and farther away from the people, and in other matters we are dangerously near to getting into a bad situation by being influenced by people who persuade us to do wrong. But whether I get Members of Congress to agree with me or not, I will avail of this last opportunity to try to get out of this bill a piece of legislation that is in such a wrong direction. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 38.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 6 and the noes are 38, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ANDERSON. On that motion, Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks for tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and be counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number have arisen.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee and Mr. ANDERSON to act as tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those favoring the motion that the committee do now rise will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 57.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear just what that vote was. I understood it was not a quorum. I object to it, and I made the point of order before, because a quorum was never declared. I make the point of order now that there is no quorum present. I insist that a quorum shall be present with such important business on hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is in order to take the vote by tellers when no quorum has developed. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13926) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, found itself without a quorum; whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 113 Members answered to their names, a quorum; and he reported the names of the absentees for printing in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of restoring the decoration on the walls of the first-floor corridors in the Senate wing of the Capitol, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $5,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph which provides for finishing the decorations in the basement of the Senate. I will ask the chairman of the subcommittee what is the necessity for going on further with this work in the basement?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not in the basement. It is on the first floor.

Mr. WINGO. That really constitutes the basement.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am told that there are some very fine works of art over there that are rather going to pieces, that need to be retouched and repaired. This work will be finished within another year.

Mr. WINGO. How long have they been retouching these works of art?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think this item has been carried in the bill twice before.

Mr. WINGO. It has been carried in the bill about four times, I think.

Mr. ANDERSON. Twice before, I think.

Mr. WINGO. I do not think you are getting any value received out of this work. I think it is more what might be called a sinecure for somebody. I do not see any necessity for continuing work of that kind at the present time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think there is very great necessity for it.

Mr. WINGO. What particular work of art have they touched up during the past year?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not tell the gentleman. I have not gone into it in detail.

Mr. WINGO. Did the committee have hearings on it?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is a Senate item. The House committee does not go into Senate items.

Mr. WINGO. They just let the Senate have their way about it, do they?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senate ordinarily appropriates for its own items; yes. That has been the practice in the House since I have known anything about it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is correct about that. That has been the practice. I think really we ought to call a halt on that kind of expenditure of the public funds. I do not think there is any use of continuing that work. I do not know what they have done with the money they have gotten heretofore for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas and Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 11, nays 54.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote because a quorum is not present, and I make the point that no quorum is present.

The Chairman. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-six Members present. The clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Army appropriation bill. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the country has been waiting for nearly five years to see what water-power policy and what policy for operating the nitrate plant the House will adopt at Muscle Shoals.

On June 24, 1922, when the military appropriation bill was under consideration in the House, I introduced the following amendment, which was passed:

For the continuation of the work on Dam No. 2 on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Ala., but not to become available until the 1st day of October, 1922, $7,500,000.

The Members of the House who voted for this resolution—and it passed by a majority of 37—had no intention of obstructing the completion and the full development of water power at Dam 2, but we who supported the amendment desired to settle on some policy before making further large appropriations for the work on the dam. The appropriation proposed in the military appropriation bill passed by Congress last June for continuing the work on the dam was $7,500,000; and now in the Army bill just passed there is an additional appropriation of $6,998,000, with an authorization in addition of $10,501,000.

Now that it is clear that the House, by the decree of the Rules Committee, shall have no opportunity to vote on the Ford offer, we find that with $7,500,000 appropriated in the military appropriation bill passed last June and with $6,998,000 in the present Army bill and an additional authorization of $10,501,000 we have a total of $24,999,000—and still no policy for disposing of the water power to be developed nor for the operation of the nitrate plants.

What useful purpose, Mr. Speaker, what constructive service does the Committee on Rules, in refusing to give the House the opportunity to vote on the Ford offer, render to the country? None whatever. But the committee's refusal to permit the House to vote on the Ford offer exactly squares with the determination and activities of those who oppose the acceptance of the Ford offer and who will not themselves propose to produce fertilizers for the farmers of the country at Muscle Shoals, but obstruct a vote in the House on the Ford offer with the definite purpose of preventing Mr. Ford from furnishing the farmers fertilizers at Muscle Shoals.

In January, 1919, Mr. A. G. Glasgow was appointed fixed-nitrogen administrator by the Secretary of War and instructed to find a means for securing the production of fertilizers at Muscle Shoals. Mr. Glasgow spent months of time in an unsuccessful effort to interest, among others, the very same private interests who are here in Washington undertaking to prevent action by this Congress in accepting the offer of Henry Ford, and up to date, Mr. Speaker, their efforts have been successful.

When these interests were offered 9 per cent on whatever investment they might require to operate these plants and half of all that they could make over that percentage in addition, they told Mr. Glasgow that they were not interested. Nobody heard anything in those days about the fabulous millions and billions of dollars that the man was going to make who operated Muscle Shoals. This wonderful bonanza—this enterprise which has since been described as "the greatest gift ever bestowed upon mortal man since salvation was made free to the human race" was offered on much more favorable terms than Mr. Ford has asked, and no one would have it; and, Mr. Speaker, let this House keep in mind the undeniable fact that there was not a single offer; nobody wanted this billion-dollar bargain!

These interests knew then as they know to-day that there was some risk connected with the operation—they knew that there would have to be a big investment made before high-grade fertilizers at low cost could be produced. They did not propose to risk their money in this undertaking, but these interests opposed the acceptance of the Ford offer as well as Government operation. And these same interests opposed and aided in the defeat of the appropriation of $10,000,000 in March, 1921, for the continuation of the work on the dam for operating the nitrate plant. And the same opposition now fighting the acceptance by Congress of the Ford offer opposed the passage of the Wadsworth-Kahn bill in 1921 for the Government operation of this plant.

In March, 1921, Secretary of War Weeks announced that if he received an offer representing a fair return on the investment necessary to complete the Muscle Shoals project he would send the offer to Congress, and he instructed the Chief of Engineers, General Lansing H. Beach, to ask for bids.

On July 8, 1921, the proposal of Henry Ford was signed and sent to the Secretary of War, and its terms were made public.

Seven months afterwards, on February 1, 1922, Secretary Weeks finally transmitted the Ford offer to Congress, and on February 10 our committee began hearings on it. Five days later the proposal of the Alabama Power Co. was sent to the Secretary of War, and six days afterwards he transmitted it to Congress.

On June 24, 1922, Congress voted $7,500,000, to become effective October 1, for continuing the work on Dam No. 2, and the present Army bill authorizes approximately $17,000,000 more to complete the dam, together with 8 out of the 18 generating units. When this appropriation has been expended, Mr. Speaker, we shall have invested in this dam approximately $41,000,000, yet we have not determined on any policy as to what we are going to do with the power—with no policy as to what amount of this power, if any, shall be used in operating nitrate plant No. 2 in the production of fertilizers!

But, Mr. Speaker, when we have spent this $41,000,000 Congress will not be through appropriating money for the power development at Dam 2. The necessary facilities for transmitting this power will still have to be appropriated for. No appropriation has been made yet to provide facilities for carrying the power from the power house to the shore transformers, and none for the transformers themselves. It is now settled that the House will be given no opportunity to settle on a water-power policy or a fertilizer policy at Muscle Shoals until the Sixty-eighth Congress meets next December.

We are told that within about a year from next December power from the present proposed installations will be ready to serve. To whom will we serve it? Not to the nitrate plant, unless a policy is settled for operating that plant, by private operation or Government operation. And when we get the power ready—say about January 1, 1925—where are our transmission lines? Either the Government or private interests must build transmission lines to Nashville and Memphis and to other towns in order to distribute and sell the power. So, if the Government is to distribute this power, we must be prepared to appropriate more millions at Muscle Shoals—how many millions I do not know and I do not think anybody else does. And so, by the decree of the Rules Committee of the House, we are going it blind!

Out of all this five years of arguments and contentions, of assertions and denials, there has come one tangible thing, one definite, responsible offer to spend private money to work out this fertilizer problem. It will soon be two years since that offer was made, and, in spite of the fact that the risk at Muscle Shoals is so great that there is only one man in the United States who has both the courage to undertake the job and the money with which to carry it out, that man is held up to the country as a grasping autocrat, seeking to get $100,000,000 worth of property for $5,000,000, as though the $100,000,000 were lying down there on the bank and all he had to do was to pay $5,000,000 and go and get it. If that were so, Mr. Speaker, every man in this House well knows that there would have been a rush to secure this project, and many people would have been willing to put large capital into it, and the fact that we have but one solitary bidder, to my mind, clearly stamps as false the extravagant claims that have been made about the value of what Mr. Ford would get.

What is the cost of these five years of delay? First, there are the items of direct outlay, consisting of maintenance and guarding the nitrate plants to June 30, 1922, $827,410; the research laboratory, $833,558; and the maintenance due to stopping the work on Dam No. 2, $277,577—a total of $1,938,545. But of far greater importance are the expenditures which have been made by our farmers, and which could have been saved if the plants had been operating.

During this five-year period the British nitrogen monopoly pushed the price of nitrates to the highest price ever known in the industry; it was nearly $100 per ton at the Chilean port. Our by-product ammonium sulphate producers merely adjusted their prices accordingly and took advantage of the rise; there was no real competition in the United States and never has been. What is more, if these British monopolists have their way there never will be any real competition permitted here.

Expert evidence has been cited in the testimony to show that nitrates can be produced at Muscle Shoals and delivered direct to the farmers at about one-half of what they have been paying for them. If the production of this large quantity of nitrates at Muscle Shoals had merely had the effect of reducing the prices of fertilizer in the United States by $5 per ton, the saving to the farmers during the past five years would have amounted to more than $160,000,000—enough to have paid for the nitrate plants twice over.

But our farmers do not alone suffer the humiliation of paying a tribute to British price fixing of the Chilean nitrates our farmers buy, since every sentiment of our national pride is humiliated when we contrast the power development in Canada, at Queenston, on the Niagara River—the power installation being about the same at this Queenston development as our installation of power is at Dam No. 2, Muscle Shoals, something over 500,000 horsepower—when we compare this development with what we are doing at Muscle Shoals. Our engineers tell us that not until 1925 will we have any power to serve at Muscle Shoals, but at Queenston there has been installed and already in operation 150,000 horsepower.

When we make these contrasts, which wound our national pride, we can not escape the fact that these mistakes and the waste at Muscle Shoals since the armistice was signed have been due to a failure by Congress to decide definite policies at Muscle Shoals; and the longer the House delays in deciding upon a definite policy at Muscle Shoals, the longer will the waste of public funds continue there.

We must admit, Mr. Speaker, that with all our boasted superiority as a Nation, in some things, at least, we are no match for the British, and in the case I contrast to the House we are no match for the Canadians. And why, I ask, Mr. Speaker? It is all because of our delay, our dodging, our evasion, and failing to settle upon a policy at Muscle Shoals.

The delay imposed upon the House by the Rules Committee, the defeat by the Rules Committee of any definite policy at Muscle Shoals, the right and desire of the House to vote on a policy being denied to the House, and the Sixty-seventh Congress to adjourn without settling a policy at Muscle Shoals—all this only adds another year of tribute which the American farmer pays to the British and Chilean price control of Chilean nitrates consumed by the farmers of this country.

As to the amendment I offered on June 24, 1922, that the House might decide upon a definite policy at Muscle Shoals, none of the Members of the House who voted for the amendment are called upon to make explanations or excuses. The Members of the House who participated in this nonpartisan vote for the amendment I offered—77 Democrats and 67 Republicans voting in favor of the amendment—voted in favor of a definite water-power and fertilizer policy at Muscle Shoals; but the opportunity they sought, the chance to vote on a definite policy, was denied them. And while those who voted for my amendment have earnestly and diligently sought the opportunity since December 5, 1922, to vote on the Ford offer as the policy that should be adopted by Congress at Muscle Shoals, the Committee on Rules has refused to give them the opportunity.

The failure of Congress to adopt a water-power and fertilizer policy at Muscle Shoals, the inexcusable delay in not giving Henry Ford an answer to his offer by either its acceptance or rejection by Congress, will stand as one of the wonders of Government as well as one of its dangers.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the point of no quorum was made there was a motion pending, offered by the gentleman from Arkansas, to strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive, on page 22. The vote on that developed the absence of a quorum. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 13, noes 90.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol Grounds: For care and improvement of grounds surrounding the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings, pay of one clerk, mechanics, gardeners, care of trees, plantings, fertilizers, repairs to pavements, walks, and roadways, $52,250.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This is Saturday. Monday is for District day. Tuesday is for the consideration of the joint resolution submitting an amendment to the Constitution. Wednesday is Calendar Wednesday under the rules of the House. The House could dispense with that. We have barely a quorum here, and I want to suggest that in 20 minutes' time or 25 minutes at the outside this bill could be finished and passed. Now, I think on many of us the hair has been rubbed the wrong way. The point of no quorum is made. What is gained by it, unless it makes quite a number of people whom I see in front of me sick? The session is soon to close. There are many things to be accomplished before it does close. If certain things are not done before it closes it will mean the necessity for an extra session.

In my forty-odd years of service in the House I have had a good deal of experience. Sometimes one side of the House will be stubborn and sometimes the other. But in the end we have to get together and do something if it is possible to do it. I have seen first one side of the House and then the other go into a filibuster. You do not have a monopoly of a filibuster on that side nor do we on this side. I think many of us are hungry; why not go to work and finish this bill? This bill has got to be passed and the other bills which I have mentioned have got to be considered. How long those other bills will take I do not know, but they must be passed upon by the Senate and go to conference.

Now, I want to suggest in the best of hummor, do you not think it is better to take the time that it takes to call the roll and devote it to this bill? It is easy to break a quorum by some of us stepping out; and, while some of us have been disappointed with the day's proceedings and in yesterday's proceedings, we can not have our own way in all things. That matter is behind us. It was carried by a decisive majority, and I have no criticism to make. When a decided majority in this House has made its decision touching appropriations or any other matter I have always, in the many years that I have been here, found the best way is to accept it. You can not change it. I suggest that we take the time that it takes to call the roll and devote it to finishing this bill. The bill can be concluded and passed in 25 minutes' time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements to Senate and House stables and Maltby Building, including personal services, $1,500.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to go in between lines 22 and 23, on page 22.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, after line 22, insert a new paragraph, to read as follows: "No part of the sums herein appropriated shall be used for the purpose of purchasing by or through the stationery rooms other articles than stationery and office supplies essential and necessary for the conduct of public business, nor shall such funds be expended for the maintenance, storage, or care of private vehicles."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane.

Mr. WINGO. I am offering it as a separate section coming in between the paragraph which relates to repairs of the Senate and House stables and the Senate Office Building. If it does not come in between the Senate Office Building and the House stables, I do not know where it would come in. I offer it as a separate paragraph to the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the language is very clear. It provides that they can not use the public funds for the purchase or procuring through the stationery room of articles other than stationery and offices supplies. In every campaign you have to go through the nauseating experience of having a detailed statement of the ridiculous things that are procured through the stationery rooms of the respective Houses. It is not necessary for Members, and I think we ought to stop the practice. Another thing, we are being criticized for maintaining garages for private use. If that is being done, it ought to be stopped. That is all the amendment does.

Now, we have got to have night sessions from now on; because if it is necessary to have one to-night, it will be necessary to have them next week, notwithstanding you are further along with the legislation than ever before, notwithstanding we have put into the Senate hopper more than they can digest, notwithstanding some of the matters that are to be considered next week you never expect to become law. There are other items in the bill I would like to raise a question about if there were enough Members here. Here is a great party, and you have to have a night session, and you can not muster 25 per cent of the party on the floor at a roll call.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Does not the gentleman think that if we cut out 95 per cent of the useless talk we can transact the public business and get out of here without being held here until 8 o'clock at night?

Mr. WINGO. I doubt it very seriously, because my experience here is that some gentlemen clothed with a little brief authority which carries with it a public duty punish everybody in order to carry out their own petty idea of how long the House shall sit.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas) there were—ayes 42, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter, and I think we ought to have tellers. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Ten Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Office Building: For maintenance, including miscellaneous items, and for all necessary services, $74,614.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Does the chairman of the subcommittee think it wise, under a short provision of this kind, to expend $74,614? What does it cover? Should it not be itemized?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think so. It covers the maintenance of the House Office Building—the charwomen, the scrub women——

Mr. BLANTON. Who spends the money?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is under the direction of the House Office Building Commission and the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no particular person in charge of it.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is directly under the Architect of the Capitol and the superintendent of the building. It embraces all of the employees connected with the House Office Building, except the elevator service.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it ought to be itemized.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman from Texas notice that there has been a reduction in this item from last year of about 33 per cent? It is $24,000 less than it was last year.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but I think that an item of $74,000 for a proposition with which we ourselves are concerned ought to be itemized. I hope that the committee next year will itemize it.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman will find a list of the employees under this item in the hearings and a statement of all of the items that it covers.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The foregoing appropriations under the Architect of the Capitol may be expended without reference to section 4 of the act approved June 17, 1910, concerning purchases for executive departments.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the paragraph. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas) there were—ayes 1, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $25 may be expended at any one time by the Botanic Garden for the purchase of plants, trees, shrubs, and other nursery stock, without reference to section 4 of the act approved June 17, 1910, concerning purchases for executive departments and other governmental establishments in Washington.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the paragraph. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas) there were—ayes 3, noes 82.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote because no quorum is present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight Members present, a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER.

Salaries: Public Printer, $6,000; Deputy Public Printer, $4,500; purchasing agent, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,750; assistant purchasing agent, $2,500; cashier and paymaster, $2,500; clerk in charge of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at Capitol, $3,000; private secretary, $2,500; paying teller, $2,000; clerks—3 at $2,000 each, 2 at $1,800 each, 6 at $1,600 each, 5 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each, 7 at $1,000 each, one $840; captain of guards, $1,400; 4 lieutenants of guards, at $1,200 each; 48 guards, at $840 each; 3 messengers, at $840 each; delivery men—chief $1,200, 5 at $950 each; telephone switchboard operator, $840; 3 assistant telephone switchboard operators, at $720 each; 4 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $127,860.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 34, line 20, after the word "chief," strike out "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,400," and after the word "at," strike out "$950" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,100."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we all of us know the efficient service rendered by Andy Smith, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk. He is here on the job all of the time, and he has served this Government for over 40 years. This relief offered in this amendment is for the six men who are his helpers. I have Mr. Smith's word for it that they can not live on their present salaries. No man can support a family on $950 a year. They render good service. I do not believe that my colleagues can keep from having this appeal to them. I work as hard as any man to reduce expenses and cut down big salaries, but I have never yet opposed bringing up a salary that is inadequate. I want to see a man get enough money to support his wife and children, if he has any, and if he has not a wife, so that he may get one.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman know whether Sam Robinson's salary is in that section?

Mr. BLANTON. I wish it were. But he will be cared for in the deficiency bill.

Mr. TINCHER. I would like to vote to increase his salary.

Mr. BLANTON. Five of these are the men who deliver things back and forth for Mr. Smith. The first man provided for in my amendment is the man who sits in that little railed-off place at Andy's desk all day long, waiting on you gentlemen when you go there to see about the RECORD. He is Andy Smith's assistant. He is there all of the time. He is a very efficient employee of this Government.

Mr. TINCHER. Where is Sam Robinson's salary provided for?

Mr. BLANTON. In the deficiency bill; otherwise I would have included a raise for him.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know that I understand the gentleman's amendment, but the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD messengers, whom we know, have an allowance in addition to this which is carried in the deficiency bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The messengers are not embraced in this amendment. I have been advised that this is the total salary of these men. They have no other recourse except this salary.

Mr. CHALMERS. And the bonus.

Mr. BLANTON. This is their basic salaries. This amendment does not embrace the RECORD messengers at all. I submit the matter, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct the totals in accordance with the action of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in accordance with the action of the committee. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13926) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent,

Mr. TUCKER was granted leave of absence for two days on account of sickness in family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 16. Joint resolution providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates.

H. R. 12777. An act granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Red River of the North.

H. R. 13474. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, the town of Rockford, and the city of Rockford, in said county, in the State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River.

H. R. 13195. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Missouri, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River in the State of Missouri.

H. R. 13139. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a railroad bridge across Pearl River at approximately 1½ miles north of Georgetown, in the State of Mississippi.

H. R. 13493. An act to authorize the State road department of the State of Florida to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Escambia River, near Ferry Pass, Fla.

H. R. 13511. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Paul, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 43. Joint resolution to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C.

CONFERENCE REPORT, AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Pending the motion to adjourn, I desire to present a conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill for printing under the rule.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I thought I was recognized to offer a motion to recommit, but if I do not lose that right——

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; that right will be pending, if the House adjourns, on Monday. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman if it is his intention to call up the conference report on Monday?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senate acts upon the conference report first, and I think it has not acted yet. And the probabilities are it will not be called up on Monday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How does it happen the Senate acts first?

Mr. ANDERSON. They agreed to the conference. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet, under its previous order, to-morrow, Sunday, January 21, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

918. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the vice chairman of the American Legion, transmitting a financial statement of the American Legion for the 12 months ending December 31, 1922, as supplemental to a report filed prior to January 1, 1923, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. ZIHLMAN: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 3136. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 1441). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BOX: Committee on Claims. H. R. 370. A bill for the relief of Charles W. Mugler; without amendment (Rept. No. 1440). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ROUSE: A bill (H. R. 13948) to make the provisions of paragraph 1 of section 1559 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, as amended July 14, 1920, as promulgated under the provisions of section 6593 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, applicable to substitute post-office clerks and substitute letter carriers who have served one year or more; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13949) to make the provisions of paragraph 1 of section 1559 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, as amended July 14, 1920, as promulgated under the provisions of section 6593 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, applicable to substitute railway mail clerks who have served one year or more, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 13950) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved by the President July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A resolution (H. Res. 485) for the immediate consideration of H. R. 8334, amending the postal-saving system; to the Committee on Rules.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska calling upon Congress to direct their best efforts toward securing national legislation that will more equitably adjust freight and express rates as between the producer and the consumer; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COLE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 13951) granting a pension to Charles O. Rider; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUNBAR: A bill (H. R. 13952) granting a pension to Henry T. Sprinkle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LARSON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 13953) authorizing, for the relief of the distress of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, the withdrawal of moneys from the tribal funds of said Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 13954) granting a pension to John M. Barrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 13955) for the relief of Claude Chandler; to the Commitee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13956) for the relief of Henry J. Corcoran; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 13957) granting a pension to John J. Mahoney; to the Commitee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOODRUFF: A bill (H. R. 13958) granting a pension to William F. Graham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6951. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of residents of Valley Home, Calif., urging support of joint resolution providing for the extension of aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6952. By Mr. COLE of Ohio: Petition of citizens of Findlay, Ohio, asking that the section in the internal revenue law referring to ammunition and firearms be repealed; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6953. By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of Alfred Bach and other citizens of Sebewaing, Mich., urging passage of the resolution to extend aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6974. Also, petition of 62 citizens of Pennsylvania, urging Congress to extend immediate aid to the people of the German and Austrian Republics; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

SUNDAY, January 21, 1923.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, the number of our days is with Thee. Thou dost determine the bounds of our habitation. Help us, we beseech Thee, to understand that while life is so uncertain and there come aching hearts bowed with grief, we ask Thee to enable us to realize for ourselves that Thou art the refuge and the strength of every troubled life. And as we engage in the services this morning we pray that such lessons may be presented and such inspiration had that we may understand better the dignity, the opportunity, and the high incentive to live nobly and to serve our generation by Thy will.

We thank Thee for him whose life is to be remembered this morning, and in whose varied condition and experiences were recognized dependence upon Thy grace. And, O, grant unto the widow and to others connected with his life the sweetest ministries of Thy richest consolation, so that it may be understood that the Maker of us all is her husband and that He is also the father of the fatherless. Be with us when we cry out "for the touch of a vanish'd hand, and the sound of a voice that is still," and in the loneliness of the passing days be the companion, the consolation, the abiding strength of each life.

And may this chamber be filled with men devoted to the highest interests of the country and to the glory of Thy great name.

Hear us, help us, so when the shadows quicken and become thicker to us we may have a vision of the life beyond, and that absence from the body may be unto each of us presence with the Lord. We ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Saviour and Lord. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1923.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, a Senator from the State of Georgia, to perform the duties of the Chair to-day, Sunday, January 21, 1923, on the occasion of memorial services for Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President Pro Tempore.

Mr. HARRIS thereupon took the Chair as Presiding Officer for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, January 16, will be dispensed with and the Journal will be approved.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR THOMAS E. WATSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HARRIS). The Chair asks the Secretary to read the resolutions which he submits for the consideration of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary, Henry M. Rose, read the resolutions (S. Res. 415) as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. GEORGE took the chair as Presiding Officer.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, during my first two years' service in the Senate my late colleague Senator WATSON wrote me a number of times, usually about veterans who had requested him to help them with their claims, but it had never been my privilege to be introduced to him until he came to Washington to serve with me in the Senate. After his arrival, and the day before he was to take the oath of office, I telephoned him that I would like to call on him and then offered my services if I could be of any assistance to him. He said he was ill from the railroad journey and asked if I would come to his hotel to see him, as he was anxious to discuss several matters with me. When I called he was resting in bed and he impressed me as being far from strong and well. The next day he came to the Senate just before noon and sent for me. I introduced him to the Vice President and the Senators and, as is customary, I walked with him to the Vice President's desk when he took the oath of office. From that time until his death matters of interest to our State, our personal matters, brought us together almost every day and we became good friends. In my dealings with him he was most considerate at all times. It so happened that the Senators he liked best had been my warm friends since I had been a Member. While we differed on some questions, we were always together on matters of interest to the people of our State and country. He was always on the side of the common people.

Senator WATSON's hard work in the Senate shortened his life. Time and again I noticed that he appeared worn and tired, and I would urge him to go out in the sunshine and air and take more exercise. I told him that the climate here was treacherous and different from our Georgia climate, and that he could not stand the work as I had on account of the difference in our ages. Many times he promised to take my advice and not work so hard, but the next day he would be here fighting the people's battles. The last time I saw him, the day before I went to Europe with the Congressional delegation to attend the Inter-Parliamentary Union, which has for its purpose the settlement of all differences between governments by arbitration so as to prevent war, I told him that as he had not been well I would not go away, but he insisted that I go. He said he felt very much better, and promised me that he would rest and not overwork. Just as I was sailing for home I read of his death, which was a great shock to me.

One thing that made Senator WATSON my friend was never mentioned by either of us. During the last administration Senator WATSON was indicted by the grand jury of the Federal Court because of some articles in his paper sent through the mails. An effort was made to have him taken out of Georgia to be tried. Members of Congress from Georgia informed me of this and asked if I would not join with them and try to prevent it. While I did not know Senator WATSON and had never had any communication with him I promptly told the Congressmen that I would gladly cooperate with them and do my utmost to prevent Senator WATSON's being taken out of the State for trial, as I considered it an injustice to Senator WATSON and a reflection on the people of my State to say that any citizen could not get a fair trial within her borders. We prevented this from being done, and he was grateful to all who assisted in this matter.

Senator WATSON took part in all the debates of the Senate—his knowledge of history and government made him ready at all times. He attended all the Democratic Party caucuses and cooperated with the Democrats on party measures. He did not neglect his committee work, which is more important in framing legislation than speeches on the floor of the Senate.

He was on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, was prompt in his attendance at all meetings, and rendered most useful service. I had urged that he be placed on this Committee because he had been, while a Member of the House, author of the first appropriation bill for rural free delivery service which now daily serves millions of people. He was placed on the Immigration Committee at his request, as he was interested in keeping our country from being overrun with foreigners who did not understand our Government. I served with him on this Committee and personally know of his splendid work.

He was also on the Committee on Civil Service and Committee on Claims, and the other members of these committees have told me of his useful work on them. As a member of the Committee on Claims he handled and secured passage through the Senate several Georgia claims, besides many deserving ones from other sections of the country. I remember the great interest he took in the claim of a poor widow from another state who had no influence.

Senator WATSON had more friends in Georgia who would at all times follow him than any public man within my time. With this following he made and unmade Governors, Senators, Congressmen, and public officials, and his following was larger in his last days. He was always fighting for the masses of the people and opposing special interests. That he should have, after serving two years with me, wished me to remain in the Senate and help him is something I shall cherish always.

His life was a busy one. He was a leader in all things—politics, law, and as a banker, farmer, and author of history. He was in many ways the most remarkable man of my time in our State.

So far as the outside world was concerned much friction entered into his career, but he was greatly blessed in the serene and peaceful atmosphere created in his home by his admirable, gentle, and, in many ways, most unusual wife. Several years ago a crushing sorrow came to them in the loss of their only children, a son and daughter.

The one man Senator WATSON loved and trusted above all others was that gallant soldier and splendid citizen, Maj. Charles E. McGregor, who knew him better than any of his friends, and at my request he prepared an article about Senator WATSON's life.

Major McGregor wrote the following:

THOMAS E. WATSON was born in Columbia County (now McDuffie), near the present town of Thomson, Ga., on September 5, 1856. His grandparents came with a colony of Quakers from North Carolina in 1750, who purchased and settled a large tract of land between the Savannah and Ogeechee Rivers, including the lands in and about the old town of Wrightsboro. His immediate family were slave owners until the close of the Civil War, which destroyed that specie of property. Liquidation of security debts swept away their lands. He attended the common schools at Thomson, Ga., and in 1872 entered Mercer University. During the vacation of 1873 he applied to Prof. B. M. Zettler, County School Commissioner, and obtained a license to teach school. He then made a contract with the school trustees of "Big Warrior Militia District" in Bibb County, Ga., to teach for three months at $50 per month and board. At the close of the sophomore term, June, 1874, he had to leave the university and seek work. His family was living at Augusta, Ga., at this time to which city he went hoping to get employment, but failed. He sold for $6.50 some books which his father had given him, and started out to make his own way in life. The Baptists were holding an association in an adjoining county to which he went, hoping that among so many good Christians he might find employment as a teacher for a country common school. Undaunted by failure he went into Screven County, Ga., and succeeded in making up a small school at "Little Horse Creek Church." Here he taught school for two years. The revenue barely paid his living expenses but the people, who were very poor, were exceedingly kind to him, liked him, and he loved them. From this association grew strong attachments to the common people which were never broken but grew stronger and stronger as THOMAS E. WATSON advanced in political life. It was here in the humble homes of these common people that he read law and history, preparing himself for the great conflicts of life. It was here where he daily saw the hardships of the average farmer in Georgia. It was here he saw the patient courage with which they labored to rear their children aright and to overcome disadvantages of their condition. Eating at their tables, sitting at their firesides, sleeping in their beds, he gained a knowledge of the working farmers that no books could give. They gave him a home, they gave him work when he could find none in a city. Later on, when he was manfully struggling to gain prestige as a lawyer, they gave him verdicts. Still later on when he sought political honors, they gave him their plaudits and their ballots. In return he gave them 30 years of unstinted advocacy and finally his life.

He was admitted to the bar in the City of Augusta, Ga., in 1875. He then returned to his own home in Thomson, Ga., in November, 1876. His family was then living at their own home 3 miles from Thomson, Ga., from which he daily walked to his office in the courthouse. His practice gradually grew from $212 gross to $12,000. In the latter part of his experience as a lawyer he was enabled to command large fees. By judicious investments in lands he gradually accumulated a large landed estate.

In 1878, he married Miss Georgia Durham, daughter of Dr. George W. Durham, the leading physician of McDuffie County, Ga. To this union were born three children, all of whom died before 1920. The one great solace in his darkest hours of political defeat was this devoted wife and mother; the brightest rays of light which illuminated his path to duty was the loving smiles of his sweetheart, "Miss Georgia."

In 1882 he was elected to the Georgia Legislature and served one term, declining reelection. In 1888 he was elector at large for the State of Georgia on the Democratic ticket and stumped the State for tariff reform and Cleveland. The success so gratified the farmers that they elected him to Congress—every county in the district giving him a majority, except the home county of his opponent. In 1891 the Farmers Alliance adopted a resolution demanding allegiance of those Congressmen they had elected to the principles they espoused when seeking their support, regardless of caucus dictates of either of the old political parties. In as much as he had championed the principles of the farmers alliance in every county of the district, and pledged himself to their advocacy, if elected to Congress, he felt honor bound to adhere to those principles, and therefore refused to bind himself to any caucus action inimical to his constituents. His position was denounced by all machine Democrats, and a bitter, determined warfare was launched against him in every county in Georgia, and a campaign fund was contributed from other States to aid in his defeat.

It was in this campaign of 1892 that I became closely associated with him. He purchased a newspaper in Atlanta, Ga. We named it the "People's Party Paper," which, through its columns, he kept in touch with the public.

The result of the 1896 Bryan campaign scattered and disbanded the People's Party movement, and the paper went down with the party. My association with him in the legislature of 1882 revealed to me his great storehouse of knowledge, ability to use it, his incorruptible integrity, and the indomitable courage to battle for right regardless of consequences. It was during this session of the Georgia Legislature, as we collaborated in the enactment of the local-option laws, which closed the barrooms and made Georgia a "stock law" State, that the close brotherly friendship was joined which lasted till death claimed him, and it was this knowledge which caused me to join with him in battling against the bitter political prejudices and anathemas hurled against him in the dark and unpleasant campaign days of the nineties by a partisan press and unthinking place hunters.

A series of joint debates with his opponent were arranged—five were held when the campaign manager of his opponent declined to continue them. His district was "gerrymandered" by the Democrats while he was in Congress. Two of his strongest counties were taken from the district and two bitter hostile counties were substituted therefor. In the election which followed, the bitterest campaign ever experienced in Georgia, he carried every county in the district except one, and that was Richmond. In this county the Democrats out of a voting population of 11,466 polled 22,000 and counted 12,558, which gave their candidate the majority vote and the certificate. Had only legal votes been cast in Richmond County, he would have been returned to Congress. He therefore contested the election. The minions of the trusts had avenged their defeated comrade, the "Bagging Trust," the men who controlled in Georgia politics, had buried the invincible champion of the masses against the classes.

During the term that he was permitted to serve he labored for the masses. He supported the eight-hour law. He led the debate on the automatic coupling bill, requiring all railroads to equip their freight cars with such appliances within five years. He introduced and had passed in the House the first resolution which was ever passed in this country providing for the delivery of mails to the country people outside the limits of cities, towns, and villages.

This resolution carrying an appropriation for experimental free delivery is the foundation for the present system, the greatest educational agency ever established by Congress. Fortunately, Postmaster General Wannamaker agreed with Mr. WATSON'S idea, and immediately put the system into operation. So popular it has grown that both the Democratic and Republican parties take pride in claiming the credit.

At that time a barroom was kept open day and night in the Capitol building. Naturally much drunkenness was in evidence on the floor of Congress. He had been largely instrumental in driving the barrooms out of Georgia, and tackled the one in the basement of the Nation's Capitol in his campaign book, which was issued that year. He was attacked in debate for making public exposure of the conditions existing. WATSON repeated them on the floor of the House. A violent uproar ensued. An attempt was made to expel or censure him, but the effort was abandoned. Public sentiment, however, had been aroused, and subsequently forced the closing of the barroom.

In 1896 the Populist Party numbered two million voters and had one thousand two hundred newspapers. The Democratic Party was in a bad way. They hit upon the scheme of capturing the Populist voters by adopting their platform and nominating Bryan as a pledged representative of Populist principles. The Populist National Convention refused to endorse Bryan until they nominated WATSON for Vice-President. Telegrams assuring Mr. WATSON that leading Democrats would accept the compromise ticket of Bryan and WATSON poured into Thomson. Believing that a combination of the reform parties would be accomplished and the reforms he had advocated would be made possible, he agreed to accept the nomination. Unfortunately, Bryan and his friends failed to keep their promise and the Republicans won out.

With his political party put out of business by the fusion with Bryanites, he turned to literature and wrote "The Story of France," the "Life of Napoleon," and "The Life and Times of Jefferson," wherein he advocated the same eternal principles of human liberty and justice and good government that he had preached from Georgia to Nebraska, from New York to Texas. During these years he delivered a lecture on the South in many cities, while it furnished a good revenue. He was so engaged when the Peoples' Party National Convention, without his knowledge or effort, called upon him to again raise the standard for them to rally around and to lead them again to battle for the rights of the common man. He accepted the nomination through a sense of duty, and developed immense crowds throughout the North and Northwest, advocated the same eternal principles of human liberty and justice and good government.

In March, 1905, at the request of one W. D. Mann, a capitalist in New York, who proposed to finance the enterprise, he consented to publish a magazine to bear his name and be edited by him. Failing to pay his salary he withdrew from the arrangement, and the magazine suspended, owing him several thousand dollars. It was while he was engaged in New York working on this magazine that he was stricken with ptomaine poison, from the effect of which he never fully recovered. Upon his convalescence he decided to enter again the newspaper field. Calling me to a conference with himself and his wife "Miss Georgia"—he seldom made ventures without consulting her—it was decided to establish one at the earliest date. Having had years of newspaper experience I was requested to put the decision into execution. I made arrangements in Augusta for its publication, named it the "Jeffersonian," and in 10 days from its inception had it traveling through the mails in October, 1906. By December of the same year its circulation permeated nearly every State in the Union, and the monthly Jeffersonian Magazine was launched in Atlanta, Ga., and the weekly Jeffersonian was transferred from Augusta, Ga., to Atlanta, Ga., and was fully equipped with modern machinery, from which both publications were issued, and Mr. WATSON'S various literary publications were printed.

During the years 1907 and 1908 he was engaged in writing the "Life and Times of Andrew Jackson," a monograph on "Waterloo," a book of "Prose Poems," a volume of "Sketches from Roman History," and a handbook of "Politics and Economics" and the "Life and Speeches of THOMAS E. WATSON." Regarding the Roman Hierarchy as the greatest menace to America, he devoted much time to its exposure. His thorough study of the history of the Roman Catholic Church made him an authority on the subject, and his scathing arraignments of the abuses practiced by the priesthood, and condoned by the hierarchy, aroused the sentiment of the Catholic laity to the extent of boycotting his Jeffersonian and having them excluded from the mails. He was indicted and prosecuted in the United States District Court for sending obscene literature through the mails. He defended himself in one of the most sensational trials ever witnessed, and was acquitted.

In his "Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson," written in 1908, he attacked Woodrow Wilson as a fair historian of the South. He fought him and his administration to the bitter end. So severe were his criticisms that he was threatened with arrest and deportation to another State for trial. A protest signed by the entire Georgia delegation excepting Senators Hoke Smith and Thomas W. Hardwick, the latter declaring "he did not care if Watson was quartered and the four different quarters of his body tried in four different States," was filed and the plot to silence his pen fell through.

After the exclusion of his Jeffersonian from the mails he purchased the Columbia Sentinel, transferred it to his plant at Thomson, Ga., stronger with the voting population of Georgia and dearer to their hearts than before his persecution.

The Watson publications enjoyed a national circulation, reaching every community in America. The editor buried himself in his periodicals; he often referred to the two "Jeffs" as the children of his old age; and it was to him a heart-crushing blow when Postmaster General Burleson denied the "Jeffs" access to the mails because of their editor's hostility to certain war measures demanded by the administration, including conscription.

Mr. WATSON'S attitude during the World War has been the subject of much comment from hostile pens. Many editors took delight in misrepresenting his views on war measures, not the war itself. Many people were never able to understand why the administration closed the mails to the Watson publications. Political enemies tried to create the impression throughout the country that WATSON was not in sympathy with the allied cause and that he leaned toward Germany.

Postmaster General Burleson demanded that the Watson publications be suppressed and that the editor himself be silenced because he opposed conscription. Mr. WATSON accepted the verdict; he retired to private life without any attempt to embarrass the administration in any way whatsoever. He advised his followers to bow their heads to the verdict of constituted authority, and to obey every valid law.

Following the signing of the armistice, Mr. WATSON purchased the Columbia Sentinel, and made it the successor of his suppressed "Jeffs."

He conducted a brilliant campaign against the League of Nations, and convinced a majority of Georgians that this Nation should not surrender the old policies for a new dream.

In 1920 the administration followers in Georgia named Attorney General Palmer as their choice for the Presidency. Mr. WATSON believed that a presidential preference primary should be conducted in Georgia in order to arrive at the people's choice in this matter. In the meantime Senator Hoke Smith announced his candidacy to succeed President Woodrow Wilson. With Attorney General Palmer representing the administration and the League of Nations, and Senator Smith representing himself, Mr. WATSON'S name was entered without his knowledge.

Subsequently the people petitioned Mr. WATSON to enter the race for the Senate to succeed Senator Smith, who was a candidate for reelection after having been defeated in the presidential primary. Gov. Hugh M. Dorsey also announced as a candidate. Mr. WATSON consented to the announcement of his candidacy for the Senate, and was elected by a large majority.

Mr. HARRIS resumed the chair.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, we have assembled to-day for the purpose of paying honor and loving tribute to a great and illustrious Georgian, a great American, who, just as the autumn leaves were falling in the year but recently recorded in the history of time, ended a long and useful earthly career.

It had not been my privilege to have a personal acquaintance with Senator WATSON until he became a member of the Senate. But even in my youth I delighted in reading Watson's Magazine and in reading his weekly paper, because from those publications I gained knowledge, I gained inspiration, and was encouraged in my ambition for greater things in life. After I had reached manhood and entered upon a public career I continued to read his editorials because I found them brilliant, fascinating, and, as I believed, expressive of the sincere sentiments of an earnest and honorable American.

When the news was heralded throughout the country that the distinguished and lamented Senator from Georgia had passed away, many were the eyes that were filled with tears of grief and the hearts that were saddened, not only in Georgia, but in Florida and throughout many other States of the Union. Thousands upon thousands of our citizens admired and believed in this great American and brilliant statesman because of his honesty of purpose, because of his ability, his integrity, and his unfaltering devotion to the interests of the American people.

A voice we loved is silent, a warm heart beats no more, a brilliant mind sleeps beneath the sod of the Southland. A merciful and loving God had sustained him through the morning and noontide of life and he was well within the shadows of evening when the summons came.

His was a long, useful, and brilliant career—a life of service and achievements that will reflect as a benediction for good into the years and the ages to come. No truer words have ever been uttered than those of the poet that—

> We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
> In feelings, not in figures on the dial.

Senator WATSON had made his impress on his own native State and throughout the Nation. I have often thought and felt that he was by some misjudged; in fact, I have found that to be true, more or less, in my State, and I have when an opportunity afforded itself endeavored to correct that misapprehension. Because of his courageous and persistent efforts in behalf of those policies and purposes in which he believed he was sometimes called "fighting TOM WATSON," and many people, perhaps, who did not know him personally, who did not enjoy an intimate acquaintance with him, felt that he was probably a man of more or less disagreeable disposition in personal contact with his fellow man; but after I knew him in the Senate, I found in him one of the most congenial, most courteous, and most noble-hearted men with whom I had ever come in contact. He was as gentle, as kind, and as considerate in his disposition as a sweet-spirited and kind-hearted woman. It seems that he had a burning passion to try to assist those who needed help; and I may remark here sometimes it seems as we pass on down through the years we meet all too few of those who find pleasure in giving aid to those who need assistance; but this virtue was very characteristic in the life of the honored and distinguished gentleman to whom we pay tribute to-day.

I was traveling from Washington to Florida by automobile on the day Senator WATSON'S death was announced. I was in Georgia on the day his remains were placed at rest in the bosom of the soil of his native State. As I journeyed through that State and saw the evidences of appreciation and esteem in which he was held by Georgians quite generally, I was impressed with the thought that surely he had not lived in vain. A man who had won for himself a place in the hearts of his fellow citizens as had the late Senator WATSON certainly had left behind him a far greater heritage than all the wealth of the world could purchase. I did not previously know so very much of his private life, of his many acts of kindness and charity, but within that day and a half of travel through Georgia not less than a half dozen people spoke to me about his generosity in administering to the poor, how he found peculiar pleasure in assisting young men who desired to obtain an education, having aided many of them at that trying period in their lives when they were endeavoring to equip themselves for the responsibilities of the years to come.

Senator WATSON was a man whose heart beat in sympathy for humanity. He was a man who wished faithfully to serve his country and his people. He was frank; he was honorable in all of his associations with the Members of the Senate as well as throughout his entire career before reaching a position in this distinguished body. We always knew where Senator WATSON stood on public questions. He was a fearless man and spoke his sentiments. It was probably because he was so frank and so uncompromising in his advocacy of the principles he believed in that he sometimes made enemies. That is true of any courageous man.

Mr. President, it was a fitting climax of the career of this illustrious Georgian, that it was his privilege to serve his great State and to represent his people in this body, one might say, just at the sunset of life, after he had with an undaunted courage, and without faltering, struggled for a third of a century in behalf of policies and principles which he conceived to be right, many of which have been written into the laws of the land and are to-day popular throughout the Nation.

Mr. President, as I came in contact with Georgians from time to time after Senator WATSON had become a Member of this body, it was quite evident from their expressions that he was winning himself into the hearts of thousands and thousands of Georgians who previously had never particularly cared for him; not that they did not admire the man, not that they did not appreciate his courage and his brilliancy, but because they had differed with him upon public issues. Approximately two years service in the United States Senate, however, was making its favorable impress upon thousands who had not in years gone by been his political friends, and, while it may be said that previously he had such an extensive following that he made and unmade governors and Members of the Congress of the United States, I say to you, Mr. President, coming from an adjoining State, that Senator WATSON, by his splendid service in the United States Senate, his devotion to his country, and his devotion to his State was enlarging that circle of friends; and the influence which he already enjoyed, in my opinion, had he survived, would have been greatly augmented and increased.

I am glad to join with other Senators in paying honor to him and expressing this brief tribute to his memory. As I have observed his career for many years rather closely, I sincerely feel that not only Georgia but the entire Nation has sustained a great loss in the death of the late lamented distinguished junior Senator from that State.

Mr. President, Senator WATSON was blessed in having a noble and devoted life companion who assisted him, who gave him comfort and inspiration in his struggles, who stood by him in sunshine and shadow, who with a loving devotion was by his side giving him courage and cheer, whether in the bitter conflict of the political arena or whether enjoying the sweet and ennobling influence of the family fireside. As is true of all men that are so fortunate, Senator WATSON was indeed blessed in having this devoted companion to assist him in his many achievements and to counsel with him in the many conflicts with which he was engaged throughout his long and at times quite stormy career. My heart of sympathy goes out to his most estimable widow and other members of his family. As much as a friend can mingle his sorrow and grief with the sorrow and sadness of those near and dear to the departed one, I grieve with his loved ones. To his loving and devoted wife and other members of his family I would offer a word of hope, in the thought that some day, beyond the grave, in the land of the blessed, you will see him, you will meet him again—

> Where the faded flowers shall freshen—
> Freshen never more to fade;
> Where the shady sky shall brighten—
> Brighten never more to shade;
> Where the sun blaze never scorches,
> Where the starbeams cease to chill,
> Where no tempest stills the echoes
> Of the wood or wave or hill;
> Where the morn shall wake in gladness
> And the noon the joy prolong;
> Where the daylight dies in fragrance
> 'Mid the burst of holy song.

As I have said, Mr. President, Senator WATSON impressed himself upon his State and upon the American people because he was a man of conviction, a man of intelligence, a man of courage, but standing out preeminent as a beacon in his life was his love of humanity and his deep and sincere concern for the great masses. Love of humanity is one of the most beautiful attributes known to the human heart. Sometimes it seems as though the old world were cold; that there were more chill than warmth in it. When the clouds gather and we journey in an atmosphere of chill, then we sigh and long for the warmth of a big-hearted, noble soul who loves humanity, as did our lamented friend and associate, the late junior Senator from Georgia. In Leigh Hunt's poem we find beautifully portrayed that love for his fellow men which was so characteristic of the distinguished and lamented Senator to whom we pay honor to-day:

> Abou Ben Adhem, may his tribe increase,
> Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
> And saw, within the moonlight in his room,
> Making it rich and like a lily in bloom,
> An angel writing in a book of gold.
> Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
> And to the presence in his room he said,
> "What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,
> And with a look made all of sweet accord,
> Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord."
> "And is mine one?" said Abou. "Nay, not so."
> Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
> But cheerily still, and said, "I pray thee, then,
> Write me as one who loves his fellow men."
> The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
> It came again, and with a great wakening light,
> And showed the names whom love of God had bless'd,
> And, lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I speak briefly at this service, not because any poor word of mine will add to the story of the courage and achievements of the late Senator THOMAS E. WATSON. That story will be told by others who knew him more intimately and for a longer period than it was my privilege to know him.

I had never met him until he came to the Senate two years ago, though as a boy and a young man interested in politics the story of his fierce political contests, his courage, bordering at times on rashness, his unfaltering devotion to the things in which he believed, was not unknown to me.

When he came to the Senate, it chanced that for many months we lived at the same hotel. Our families were intimately acquainted, and I saw much of our late colleague. On most public questions our views were widely divergent. I usually was so unfortunate as to have to disagree with him in his premises, to question his logic, and to combat his conclusions; yet we were always friends, no matter how heated the contest.

I think, just there, I might give an illustration of that to which I have just referred. There were times when the relations seemed to be somewhat strained because of a certain controversy that was going on here, which Senators will remember. I recall that while the tariff bill was under consideration there were two or three amendments in which I was very much interested, upon which I wished to be heard. It had become necessary for me to leave the Senate for some days, and I had arranged with the chairman of the committee to have these amendments called up out of order. It was about 40 minutes until the train was to leave; and, to my consternation, just at that juncture the Senator from Georgia rose to make what evidently was a rather extended speech on a historical subject. Knowing the situation, my friends on this side of the aisle said to me: "Well, there is no chance." I said, "You do not know TOM WATSON.' I walked over to his desk, though we had had a rather heated exchange only recently, and I said: "Senator, I must leave" and explained the circumstances to him. He sat down immediately and I was able to secure action on my amendments. Though there were heated controversies, Senator TOM WATSON did not permit these differences to interrupt the courtesies and amenities existing between friends.

His family life was beautiful, and typically American. The flowers of unsullied affection bloomed ever fresh in that household.

The devotion of the Senator to his good wife and his affection and unceasing care and concern for the two beautiful orphaned little granddaughters who made their home with him, was most touching and inspiring. It is upon such home life as this that the strength of the Republic rests. While American homes remain pure and undefiled, the Nation will be strong; but when, if ever, family ties weaken and tear asunder, the Republic will totter to its fall.

It is not my purpose to pronounce a eulogy upon my friend who has gone away, nor to recite the story of his numerous political battles, in which he was well able to take care of himself, and neither asked nor gave quarter. Some of us will remember the tremendous mastery of invective that this friend of ours possessed. I never shall forget one sentence that comes to my mind just now, and there are in the Chamber those who will well remember the circumstance. A controversy had been running on here about a certain individual not necessary to name. Inquiry was made of the Senator while he was on the floor as to what he knew about this man. I never shall forget his frightful comparison. Some of you remember it, I am sure. Speaking of this man, he said:

> An obscener bird never flapped his vulture wings. * * * A slimier reptile never crawled the earth—

And so forth. He was a tremendous master of invective, so that he was able to take care of himself well in any political contest. But it is not my purpose to review that, nor even to enumerate the achievements of a busy life devoted to the service of his people, for those are a part of his country's history, but rather to call the attention of his colleagues and his countrymen to some of the contributions which Senator WATSON made to the permanent best literature of his country.

It is not likely that the people of the country, and particularly the people of Georgia, whom he loved with all the devotion of a nature intense, militant, and tender as a child, though pugnacious and relentless in battle, will ever forget his tireless, lifelong struggle for the things he believed to be for the best interests of his people—a struggle that he carried on until the silvery voice no longer sounded the defiant note of battle, and the weary hands that had penned eloquent arguments to sustain his views of the people's best interests were folded in peace. But even though political service and achievement be forgotten, good literature lives on forever; and THOMAS E. WATSON has made contributions to the Nation's literature that will abide and fade not away. It will be recalled by all of us that his speeches here, even though informal, were always rich in historical and literary allusions. He read much. He was familiar with the classics, and, as I know from personal association with him, he loved literature for its own sake. If, by what I say here to-day, I can make his countrymen better acquainted with his achievements in the field of literature, I shall not have spoken in vain.

Mr. President, I know of no better way to let this man speak for himself than by calling attention to just some of the things that he said here, and one or two excerpts from things that he said elsewhere.

Senators will recall the rather notable brief address that was made by our friend here on the 27th of April, 1922. That was the day, as Senators will remember, that was set apart throughout the country for memorial services for General Grant—perhaps not throughout the country, but in very many places. It was true in Ohio. There had been no program arranged here; but the Senator from Georgia rose, and here are a few of the sentences that he uttered. A man from the South, a man who loved the South, and was proud of his southern lineage, he said this of General Grant; and I am begging Senators to think now of the literary merit. I am thinking of Senator WATSON as a contributor to the permanent literature of my country. Here is what he said of General Grant. I think it is eloquent and beautiful:

> He was * * * a great general whose sword had no poison on it; who conquered, but who, in the very moment of his victory, acknowledged the sincerity of those who fought him and gave them generous terms, forgave them and loved them. He wanted to bring us all back into a brotherly union when he said, amid the torrent and tempest of passion: "Let us have peace!" * * *
> Without irreverence, may I liken his words to those of the Galilean when He spoke to the turbulent waves of the wind-swept sea and commanded: "Peace, be still!"
> In the one case, as in the other, the danger passed and the waves sank down.

I recall very well when the Senator uttered those words, evidently without any formal preparation, just inspired by the moment.

Then I remember on another occasion, as other Senators will remember, some remarks that he made here in a perfectly informal manner upon a subject that was most depressing and touching. That was the death of Caroline Upshaw. You remember that he rose in his place and had read into the RECORD a beautiful editorial from a local newspaper, and then commented upon it as follows, in language which I think is classic.

He said:

> Mr. President, she said, "I have not cried yet"; but I venture to say that the editor who wrote that beautiful tribute wept when he wrote it; I venture to say that every Senator who read it cried when he did so; I venture to say that countless thousands of people here in Washington and in regions round about cried when they read it; and I know in my heart that, as she was carried back to be given to the soil of Georgia, there could have hardly been a dry eye from the mountains to our seaboard. * * *
> Death never plucked a whiter, sweeter flower than when it plucked her; death never stilled a braver heart than when it halted hers.

That is beautiful language, Mr. President. It is great literature.

Then, just at random, I plucked these excerpts from some of his books. He was a prolific author. I think his "Life of Napoleon" is the best I have ever read. He believed in the great Corsican. He did not think, as some historians seem to think, that Napoleon was simply a destroyer. He understood that Napoleon was a builder. He understood that it took the genius of this mighty man to topple over the corrupt monarchies of Europe, so that the people might build up in their place the free governments that have since come in. He wrote most eloquently of Napoleon. I say I think his "Life of Napoleon" is the best that I have read. His pamphlet on "Ancient Civilization" is most interesting, likewise his "Brief Story of the House of Hapsburg."

The greatest description of the battle and battlefield of Waterloo to be found in literature is, of course, that written by Victor Hugo in "Les Miserables." I think the next best is the book on "The Battle of Waterloo" by THOMAS E. WATSON; and it is significant, Mr. President, that in France this book, as well as the "Story of France" to which I shall in a moment refer, has been translated and has been used as a textbook in the schools of France; so that our late colleague's fame has spread beyond his own country.

I read his "Sketches from Roman History." I suspect that every Senator is familiar with that rather easy, sometimes not altogether accurate, but beautifully flowing history written by Abbott. His "Sketches of Roman History" are not unlike the Abbott stories—biographical largely, but most interesting, and well written. He also wrote a novel with which I am not familiar, but I am told that that is literature worth while—"Bethanys: A Story of the Old South."

I picked up and was rereading "The Story of France." Let Senator WATSON speak for a moment. He is talking about liberty. I am reading this because I think it is literature, not because I am seeking to pronounce an encomium upon a late colleague.

Talking about the principles of liberty, he said:

Wise men had conceived them; bold men has proclaimed them; brave men had fought for them; martyrs had died for them.

That is eloquence, Mr. President.

Failure came upon these principles time and again. No reform ever sprang full armed and irresistible from the head of any political Jove.

* * * * * * *

There is, and must be, the time of patient planning, of painful culture, and of gradual growth before the harvest field yellows with the ripened results.

That is just a chance paragraph in "The Story of France."

A delightful little book that came from the pen of this prolific author and statesman is his "Life of Jefferson." Just let me catch a paragraph there, where, speaking of Jefferson, he says:

His was the tranquil eminence of the soldier who had fought a good fight, and whose name was honored throughout the world. Liberty, Progress, and Philanthropy were words which could not be uttered anywhere without reminding men of Jefferson. He had done for humanity, for country, for universal improvement some work which was supremely good—work which envy could not deny nor time deface.

Then another paragraph appealed particularly to me. Speaking of the death of Jefferson, he wrote:

His end came on very gently. The last sickness was not painful; the approach to the valley was gradual and easy. He looked upon death as release from infirmity, escape from weariness and care. The final sleep passed over him like a benediction. It was noon, July 4, 1826, and his thoughts had been upon the day. He had wished to live to see it; had asked during the night of the third if it were yet the Fourth.

And so, with his latest thought on the birthday of the Republic, the great, warm heart grew cold, and the tired hands found rest.

I hold here another one of Senator WATSON's books, most of which I have read, "The Life and Speeches of THOMAS E. WATSON." I think this man at his best was a great orator, not only a contributor to permanent literature, but he had graces of speech quite unusual. I will read a paragraph from a speech delivered in his young manhood, at the time when he was a member of the legislature of his State, just a paragraph from his address at the memorial of Alexander H. Stephens. I think it is great literature. He said in part of Alexander H. Stephens:

In Southern history there has been no completer character than his. Do we look for truth and honor? No falsehood ever soiled the purity of those proud lips, and through the vices of life he had walked with robes that gathered no stain. Do we look for heroism? It is brave to combat the prejudices of our own people. He had done so. It is brave to side with the weak, the oppressed, the friendless. He had done so. * * *

The great Commander had sounded the recall, and this veteran was on his return, with the laurel upon his brow, the olive leaf in his hand, victory upon his head, and peace in his heart. He had gone out into the grain fields of life. He had reaped in the freshness of morning, in the heat of midday, and amid the slanting rays of the afternoon; but as evening came on, the old man's hand had grown feeble and tired, and he was coming home, his arm full of golden sheaves. The Master, coming, found him ready, his house in order. Never was the silver cord more gently loosed. Never was the golden bowl more softly broken.

He fell on sleep like a child weary and worn. Great Nature, the common mother, holds him tenderly to her bosom. When he shall awaken, it is inspiring to believe that he shall greet the morning in a land where there is no night, where the skies are undimmed by a cloud, where the feet bleed upon no pathway of stones, and the head wears no crown of thorns.

That, Mr. President, I think is a part of the abiding literature of eloquence in this country. I read now a brief statement by a great author of the South, John Temple Graves, concerning this man:

The publicist remains, leader of lost causes, focal of fraction, and center of economic storms. He has fought his brave battle, with unbroken courage and with unfailing eloquence, to their armed armistice or to the predestined end. He has rebuked temptation, refused every compromise of principle, turned his back upon the glittering promises of office which were set for his return to the rank of the dominant faction, and with a consistency pledged in sacrifice and maintained in heroic isolation he has kept the faith of his advocacies and followed his convictions to successive stakes of martyrdom.

Through loneliness, misunderstanding, and misrepresentation, TOM WATSON has not faltered in fidelity to the cause and the people adopted as his own 12 years ago.

And he has rarely won. Never but once in his battle-scarred career has victory perched upon his banners, or the flags of his faith over a triumphant field. His eloquence has been praised, his logic has been lauded, his consistency has been conceded, and his splendid courage has wrung tribute from his sternest foes. But by the world's standards, which are selfish and material, he must be measured as a defeated man—a baffled warrior—who has nearly always failed.

* * * * * * *

The defeated publicist, sitting for ten years desolate by his hearthstone, working out in solitude and patient honesty the strong convictions of his faith, goes forth with high courage and heroic zeal to fight. Great odds are piled against him. Slander stabs his name; scornful ridicule assails; money mocks his eloquence; friends fall away; comrades turn traitors in a night; bitterness blurs his battles; the ranks are hostile that were once his friends, and on the final field where he has staked and lost in dauntless sincerity his patriot sympathies, and his brave beliefs, night falls in failure and darken in defeat.

* * * * * * *

But the patient publicist, struggling in darkness and defeat, has wrought like the tapestry weavers that work across the sea—worked on the wrong side, maybe, but worked for the right side aye. Parties that scorned him once are absorbing now his creeds; platforms that mocked him are marking his principles in planks that plead; and the people persuaded so often to defeat him and deny are awaking at last to see that his warning was wisdom and that his signal was the safety of the State. (Sam Jones and TOM WATSON, by John Temple Graves in the Atlanta Georgian.)

These eloquent words were written by John Temple Graves before TOM WATSON's vindication and victory had come at the hands of the people of Georgia by his election to the United States Senate.

Nearly half the time the flag yonder is at half-mast. One week ago the House held memorial services for two of its distinguished Members whose lives had gone out, spent in the Nation's service. Next Sunday the Senate will pay tribute to three of its Members, and to-day we meet to lay a flower on the grave of this eloquent son of Georgia. These events should remind us all of the uncertainties of life and the importance of right living. Dangers threaten the Republic; the character of our citizenship is our shield and buckler, a character founded on industry to produce, a thrift to save, an optimism to cheer, patriotism to exalt, honesty to live by, and firm faith to die by.

Let us so live that when our summons comes t· join—

> The innumerable caravan which moves
> To that mysterious realm where each shall take
> His chamber in the silent halls of death,
> Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
> Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
> By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
> Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the late Senator WATSON of Georgia and I were born in adjoining States. When I was a young man I first heard of the Senator and had the pleasure of meeting him in 1893 while he was in Congress. He having been born in the country, and being a country lawyer, the same profession to which I belonged, I was naturally interested in his career.

The times that he has passed through have been changing and somewhat turbulent, and he was a noted exponent of these changing conditions and opinions of our people. In fact, he was a leader in many respects. While small in stature and somewhat frail, his mind was exceedingly strong, he was bright and active. I might say he was a fighter from the beginning for the right as he saw it.

I did not agree with many of his political views, yet it always afforded me pleasure to say that he was conscientious in what he advocated. He had a strong, a deep, and a sincere interest in his fellow man. Truly, he was extremely human. His affections were strong and his dislikes were not dissimilar. He worshipped his friends. In private conversation he was as deferential as a lady. We had many friends in common.

He was a champion of the rights of the masses. His friends in my State were numbered by the thousands. He was a great power in his State, and his influence was felt for a third of a century in making and unmaking political fortunes. There were times, perhaps, when he could not have been elected to office himself, but his influence was exceedingly potent in making his friends successful. He was a balance of power in Georgia for many years and at last the people of that State honored him with the cherished dream of his life—a seat in the United States Senate.

His accomplishment as a writer and historian has been dwelt upon by others and it is not necessary for me to speak of his great ability in those lines. His newspaper was one of the livest that has been published in the South for many years, and had an extremely wide circulation, especially among the rural population, and was looked upon by many people as next to their Gospel. I will say that it is exceedingly remarkable and exceptional that a man raised in this country should have written such complete histories of France and of Napoleon—volumes that have been considered among the best in the world. Some of his other works are also among the foremost of our time. I will mention also that after he came to the Senate it was truly inspiring so sit in the cloakroom and hear him go into details about historical events of all ages. He was one of the best posted of living men on these subjects.

It was not my good fortune to know him intimately in his home life, but after he came to Washington it was a pleasure to know Mrs. Watson, a truly lovable, yet retiring and modest lady of the "old school" of the South. She is a distinctive representative in the mind of what we call true southern womanhood. Her patience and untiring efforts to aid her husband in acquiring his ambition was indeed inspiring.

When the members of this Congress left Washington for their homes last September, none of us realized that before the fast-traveling trains could bear us to our destinations one of the members of this body, Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, of Georgia, would be called away.

Death is full of awe and most harrowing under all circumstances. When we stand by the side of some loved one and watch the cold hand of eternity stealthily reach out and take one away we are appalled and often heartbroken, but far greater is the shock when the summons comes suddenly and without warning. This was the case with Senator WATSON. His colleagues in this Chamber had known for some time that he was not a well man, but none expected his death so soon.

I was a member of the party appointed by the President of this body to attend the funeral services of Senator WATSON at his home in Georgia. I can truthfully say that during my entire lifetime I have scarcely ever seen so large an assemblage of citizens, men and women alike, as was present in the little town of Thomson when Senator WATSON's remains were laid to rest in his beloved Georgia soil. The outpouring was large and the grief and distress shown sincere. Citizens of all kinds had come from far and near to look for the last time upon the human form of their departed friend. During that day a gentleman told me Senator WATSON had helped him on numerous occasions—in fact had almost forced help upon him—and his only objection was that the Senator would not allow him to reciprocate. This illustrates the unselfishness of our departed friend and colleague.

The simple funeral ceremonies conducted at the grave of our departed colleague were strictly in keeping with his life—without show or pretense. As he had lived, so he died.

Senator WATSON was hoping to go home until within a few hours of his death. Almost the last words he spoke were to ask if the plans had been made, and when told that they had been, he turned over and went to sleep. Thus he went home.

Verily, we are traveling on the wings of time. Indeed, it is at a speed that none of us may count, and to-day, as we gather here to pay our humble tribute to the memory of our deceased colleague, we must be reminded that all must soon be yesterdays.

So live that when our summons come to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

After days of weary illness our late colleague lay down to dream. He heard the great clear call:

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me,
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

Out on the great uncharted sea he went. But above the hand of the invisible mariner was guiding him home to his haven of rest.

And so we remember the words of that beautiful song—

As a mother stills her child
Thou canst hush the oceans wild.

As we pass through life we are reminded more and more each day that we should be patient with the faults of others, tolerant of the opinions of others, and charitable to the weaknesses of our fellow men.

Again the poet speaks most eloquently when he says:

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see,
The mercy I to others show
That mercy show to me.

I believe the three great cardinal principles of life to be faith, hope, and charity; faith in the divinity of Christ, hope of a glorious immortality, and charity for all mankind.

Senator WATSON's record has been made as ours must soon be. Swiftly speeding as ebbs out life's little day, let us turn to our colleagues, our friends, our loved ones, yea, the friendless, and with a heart mellow with human kindness, be prepared to write the great record of life as we and they must do in the fullness of time.

It has been said that adversities and sorrow make us better men, and I believe this is true. As we look upon the seat of our late colleague, now vacated by him, we must fully realize that if we are to carry out to the fullest the Creator's plan of redemption we must daily practice justice, mercy, wisdom, and truth with those with whom we come in contact.

The hard blows we get in the daily give-and-take of life make us not only better able to go about our duties with a sterner purpose and determination, but at the same time we are enabled to feel the keen edge of another's woes when the tide of life is running strong against his fortunes.

Let justice, mercy, wisdom, and truth be our daily guides; justice to our fellow man in every relation of life, well established; mercy to cover the frailties and weaknesses of those who fall by the wayside; wisdom to guide us always on the great highways of life, and truth as the beacon light directing us along our course. May these virtues ever be with us.

Lastly, Mr. President, as the snows of winter shall disappear and be succeeded by the brightness of springtime, with all its gladdening verdure, may the sorrows, the vexations, and the troubles of mortal life be followed by a beautiful and glorious immortality, the hope of the Christian world.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, we are here to pay our last official respects to the deeds, work, life, and memory of the late junior Senator from Georgia, Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, my warm personal friend.

It was some thirty years ago, amid the hustle of the West, that I first became acquainted with Senator WATSON through the newspapers. Later I came to know him by casual acquaintance. We entered the Senate at the same time, our offices were next door, and from that day on we became personal friends and neighbors.

Through this span of years I followed his career with interest; his fighting qualities; his independence; his steady devotion to the principles he advocated. He was a man of action, a whirlwind in execution; often referred to as "that stormy petrel" from Georgia.

We of this side of the chamber often disagreed with him on partisan measures, but we all admired his courage, his fighting ability, his fairness in debate, his unassuming way in presenting his views of all subjects at issue. Defeat never lessened his energy and determination to carry through; on the contrary, he would marshal his forces and attack from a different position.

Possibly in American political life there is no one who had as many defeats as he. For more than thirty years this great self-made Georgian held the balance of political power in that State in the hollow of his hand. Not always could be succeed in elections himself, but his endorsement or disapproval of this or that aspirant for political office spelled success or failure. He did not use this great power for selfish purposes, but through it held those in public trust to a strict accounting to the public, the common man, whose cause he at all times championed.

Much personal abuse and vilification, wholly undeserved, was heaped upon his long and useful life. He was well aware of this and felt it keenly, yet he never swayed from his course. Complete personal and political independence was the shining element of his life, and this consistent independence made his enemies admire him and his friends and followers all the more zealous to follow his leadership. Party lines meant nothing to him when contrary to promises and pledges to his friends and followers. He cared not for the party whip or pressure of ruthless propaganda.

His great public service is a matter of record. To his State and to the country he has contributed no small part in many pieces of progressive legislation. To literature, especially history, he gave volumes which rank with the highest; to the home he gave the genuine devotion so characteristic of the good old Southern stock.

In the death of Senator THOMAS E. WATSON this Chamber lost a most valuable Member; the country a great public servant; his State one of the greatest of its favorite sons. No one can properly eulogize this great leader whose life was so different, whose death brings to a close a stormy, dramatic, and useful career of a great American.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has reminded us that Death is no respecter of persons. That is literally true. He visits the humble in the cabins of the poor and the proud and haughty in the palaces of the rich. The high and the low, the rich and the poor, he visits them all. He touches his dreamless slumber to their eyelids and they fall asleep.

The lithe figure that we saw moving in this Chamber and the clarion voice that we heard ringing silvery in this Hall just a little while ago are gone. The brave and brilliant Senator from Georgia has answered his last roll call, made his last speech, voted here his last time, and upon his activities as a devoted, gifted, and learned lawmaker the curtain has gone down forever.

I realize that nothing we may say can affect him now. No tribute of speech, no pæan of praise can break that deep repose that curtains 'round his pulseless heart. But we owe it to his memory, to the things that he accomplished, to the good that he has done, and to the living who loved him, to say something about the things that occupied his mind and warmed his heart while living.

Born just four years prior to the war between the States, he was only nine years old when the starry cross of the Confederacy went down. His father, a brave Confederate soldier, twice wounded at the battle front in the thick of the fight, came home to find the old order gone, his slaves freed, and the devastated South in the throes of grave financial and economic distress.

Senator WATSON's father and thousands of other slaveholders and landowners in the South found themselves confronted with the ghastly problems of poverty where they had not long before reveled in the plenitude of prosperity. It was in that new, unpromising, and hard order of things that Senator WATSON as a boy of 10 found himself environed as he struggled for an education.

He was just 17 years old when the "made-to-order panic" of 1873 came to rob and curse our people. TOM WATSON, a brave and brilliant boy in his teens, felt keenly the evil effects of the 1873 conspiracy of certain conscienceless financiers to contract the currency and produce a panic.

Long after he had overcome the difficulties that had thus been thrown in his way as a boy, and at a time when he wore the laurel wreaths of triumph, one day in writing about the difficulties that confronted him and the hardships that he had endured in his youth time, he said: "At last came the panic of 1873, and when the smoke cleared from that financial Waterloo my father was one of those who was stretched upon the field."

Mr. President, the situation was not at all promising for young WATSON. Is it any wonder, then, that the distinguished journalist, Walter Wellman, years later, in the Review of Reviews should say, "Who can withhold admiration from a man who has fought his way through all kinds of obstacles to success—who has run the race heavily handicapped from the first, and won?"

Senator WATSON won financial comfort, business success, fame as a lawyer, writer, orator, and statesman.

He had been, indeed, a poor country boy battling amidst embarrassing difficulties and privations in his efforts to make a living and get an education, but the interesting and thrilling thing in it all is he triumphed. He who had worn the humble garments of poverty and he who had walked the flinty paths of human hardship as a boy fought on and on until success smiled upon his efforts and he stood resplendent in the glow of his own proud achievements.

While yet in his teens he taught school out in the country for about two years and made barely money enough to pay his board. In one of his books he tells us that it was during that time, when he lived in their homes, ate their food, slept in their beds, and learned of their hard lot, that he became deeply interested in the problems of the poor and resolved to do something to improve their condition. From that time on till death called him home he never lost an opportunity to champion the cause of the common man and to demand for the struggling poor a fair chance in the race of life.

He taught school in the daytime and studied law at night, not by a lamp or candle light but, to use his own language, "The blaze of a fat pine knot lighted the pages of Blackstone."

When he was admitted to the bar and started into the practice of the law he had in money all told only $6.50. His first year in the practice brought him in cash only $212.

Mr. President, he knew what it was to endure hardships, to work and dream and plan and wait. All the while he was gathering useful information from printed page and storing his mind with useful knowledge.

The privations that he experienced and over which he triumphed, and the difficulties that he surmounted, have been helpful signboards along the rugged way and beacon lights in the clouded sky of many a determined struggling boy along the road of life. And in the years to come, when times are hard and things go wrong and progress seems so slow, boys will find inspiration and courage in the fact that this brilliant and distinguished United States Senator from the State of Georgia once walked the same hard and lonely path and experienced the same privations, and yet with the battle-ax of his dogged determination, reenforced by the knowledge that he as a student had acquired, he broke down the obstacles that stood in his path and made his way to eminent success.

The first thing he did as a young lawyer when he commenced to earn money for himself was to buy for his father and mother the old home and the old plantation that they had lost during the panic of 1873. He was hard pressed to make the payments, but he made them. Thus we see TOM WATSON in the morning of his young manhood giving the first fruits of his labor to his dear old father and mother. The love that he displayed on that occasion and the beautiful and tender solicitude shown for his poor parents then stamped him as a man of noble heart and as a man of heroic mold. The experiences that came to him personally on the plains of poverty and the lessons that he learned in the school of hardships acquainted him as nothing else could with the hard problems of the country's struggling poor. They left an impress upon his brilliant mind and upon his big, generous, and sympathetic heart that remained with him through life.

His deep desire to do something to bless and benefit the poor and needy, to better the condition of the toiling masses, impelled him to write and speak through the years of his busy and eventful life for justice and fair play for them.

In season and out he demanded for them a fair chance in the struggle for existence. Years ago, on one occasion when he was sick, he gave a clear insight to the longings of his great heart when he wrote these lines:

I long to do something worthy of what is best in my nature. I long to fight a good fight for justice, for better laws, for beneficent institutions, for conditions that are more equitable, for a fairer distribution of the bounties and blessings of nature and human industry.

Noble prayer beautifully expressed.

Again, he said:

Public life allured me. To be a tribune of the people, leading them upward and onward, cheered by their applause, made happy by the blessings of those whom my life work elevated and benefited, seemed to me the noblest task I could undertake.

His heart was full of human love and human sympathy. He wanted to labor in the field where he could serve the most people and do the most good.

He was wonderfully well equipped for public service. This great student was familiar with the story of every important political problem of the past. He was intimately acquainted with the history of every Government on the globe. Time and again he called to the attention of his countrymen the causes that brought political oppression and the loss of human liberty to other nations, as he urged his own country to profit by their example. To the day of his death he stood with flaming sword on the dividing line 'twixt church and State, preaching the gospel of single allegiance to the Stars and Stripes, and holding aloft the banner of whole-hearted Americanism.

He was a great admirer of Thomas Jefferson and a strong believer in his doctrine, and no man with whom I have ever served in Congress could quote more freely, more accurately, and more appropriately from his writings than could this brilliant and distinguished son of Georgia.

He was himself a fascinating writer—a master of beautiful and trenchant English. His Life of Jefferson and his Life of Jackson and his story of the Old South in a book called "Bethany" are all wonderfully interesting. He probably achieved a larger measure of fame as an author in his Life of Napoleon and his History of the French People than in anything else that he has written. A few years ago Congressman John L. Burnett, of Alabama, was on an immigrant commission touring the Old World, and he spent some time in Paris. He went into the Public Library there and asked for a history of the French people and of Napoleon, saying that he did not have long to stay, and he wanted the very best work they had, and the librarian handed him WATSON, of America, on Napoleon, and the History of the French people.

Not only that, Mr. President, but we are told that these two comprehensive and wonderfully clever and instructive productions of TOM WATSON's pen have been adopted as textbooks in the schools by the people of France.

Let me read to you what he said about why he wrote some of the books that bear his name as author:

The story of France grew out of some sketches which were written for my paper in Atlanta, Ga. The purpose was to show how class legislation and the greed of the few had wrecked the French monarchy and caused the Revolution, just as I believe they will wreck our own Republic unless checked by measures of peaceful reform.

In the Jefferson book the purpose was to show upon what principles a genuine government of the people, as contrasted to a government of the privileged few, must be founded. All the lovers of class rule go back to Hamilton; all the upholders of a government of the people, by and for the people, get their creed, so far as this Republic is concerned, from Jefferson.

As to Napoleon, he is beyond all comparison the most fascinating figure in history, and the study of the career of the charity schoolboy, who fought his way in modern Europe to a pinnacle from which he made thrones his footstools, carried its own reward. Besides, his career affords the most striking illustration of what can be done under modern conditions by giving intelligent direction to the democratic impulses of a nation. As long as Napoleon was content to represent the aspirations which the French Revolution had awakened he was irresistible. But when he again united the church with the State his strength began to wane.

After serving one term in Congress, some 30 years ago, he retired for a time from active participation in politics and devoted his splendid talents to the pleasing task—for pleasing it was to him—of writing books. What a fund of valuable information he possessed. What a treasure house of Watsonian literary gems sparkled in his brilliant mind. I will use his own language to express the exquisite pleasure that came to him as he sat in his library at Hickory Hill in Georgia writing books that brought him fame as an author. He expressed genuine joy at being once more alone with his books, and then he said there came a feeling of rapture to him as "the long shining lines of thought swept before his mental vision and as he felt the thrill and ecstasy born of creative composition." He tells us that there in his library he called around him "the serene companionship of great authors, breathed the atmosphere of the past, entered into the lives, the hopes, the struggles, the sufferings of the sublime reformers to whose courage and sacrifice we owe all that makes the world tolerable, all that gives us liberty of person, of conscience, of speech."

He was at home amidst the literary masters of the past and delighted to revel in the lore of ages long gone. But, Mr. President, neither his attainments as a scholar nor his fame as an author ever prevented him from using his pen and lifting his voice in behalf of the plain people that he loved so well. Let me read to you briefly from his story on "Corn-Planting Time in Georgia." His description of the scene presented is natural and beautiful, and his appeal for the farmer and his family is tender and pathetic—

Down the furrow and up the furrow, down to the woods and up to the fence—there they go, the sturdy plowman and his much-enduring but indispensable mule.

On moves the plowman, steady as a clock, silent and reflective.

* * * * * * *

The mocking bird circles and swoops from tree to tree, and in his matchless bursts of varied song no cadence is wanting, no melody missed.

* * * * * * *

On such a day, such a cloudless, radiant, flower-sweetened day, the horseman slackens the rein as he rides through lanes and quiet fields; and he dares to dream that the children of God once loved each other.

On such a day one may dream that the time might come when they would do so again.

Rein in and stop, here on this high hill! Look north, look east where the sun rises, look south, look west where the sun sets—on all sides the steady mule, the steady plowman, and the children dropping corn.

Close the eye a moment and look at the picture fancy paints. Every field in Georgia is there, every field in the South is there. And in each the figures are the same—the steady mule and the steady man, and the pattering feet of the children dropping corn.

In these furrows lies the food of the Republic; on these fields depend life and health and happiness.

Halt those children and see how the cheek of the world would blanche at the thought of famine!

Paralyze that plowman—and see how national bankruptcy would shatter every city in the Union.

* * * * * * *

Great is the might of this Republic! Great in its schools, churches, courts, legislatures; great in its towns and cities; great in its commerce, great in its manufactures, great in its colossal wealth.

But sweep from under it all these worn and wasted fields, strike into idleness or death the plowman, his wife and his child, and what becomes of the gorgeous structure whose foundation is his field?

* * * * * * *

And hard, indeed, would be the heart that, knowing what these people do and bear and suffer, yet would not fashion this prayer to the favored of the Republic: "O rulers, lawmakers, soldiers, judges, bankers, merchants, editors, lawyers, doctors, preachers, bondholders, be not so unmindful of the toil and misery of those who feed you!"

He lived close to the heart of nature. The little things, the main things, that make up the life of the average or normal man and woman appealed powerfully to him. No one could describe the most attractive things in nature more vividly or more beautifully than he. Let me read to you his little prose poem tribute to the "Rain Drop":

The raindrop slips from the cloud above, sinks into the soil where the seed lies buried and says to it, "I am the resurrection and the life"; trickles onward through field and forest, seeking the brook, and with the brook journeys onward, loitering in the eddy, leaping in the cascade, and faring onward until it reaches the great blue sea, from which it is lifted by the white hand of the mists back to its home in the clouds, to start once more from the skies with its message to every seed of grass and grain and flower, "I am the resurrection and the life."

No one but a person with the beautiful vision of a poet and the rare genius of a literary master could be the author of that splendid literary gem.

Mr. President, nearly 20 years ago he was nominated for President of the United States by the National People's Party and the peroration of his acceptance speech was magnificent. It was eloquent and beautiful. I will read it to you:

In Rome, the preservation of the fire was given a sacred character; a temple was built for the service, and those who were set apart to feed the flame were consecrated as to a religious duty.

Pure young women were chosen as guardian angels of the sacred fire, and if one of these vestal virgins lost her own purity or let the light in the temple go out, the penalty was death.

Within the temple, night and day, winter and summer, year in and year out, the vestal virgin watched her sacred flame. Roman eagles might be flying to the uttermost ends of the earth; Roman legions might be camping on the distant Rhine or chasing Picts and Scots to the Grampian Hills or forming lines of battle upon the Euphrates—but in the temple at Rome would be found the eternal fire, with the vestals feeding it night and day.

If the light went out in the house of any Roman—rich or poor, country or town—he was not left in darkness. Straightway he betook himself to the temple and lit his torch at the fire which the vestals had kept alive.

And all over the broad dominions of Rome there was never a fear of universal darkness, for they knew that if one vestal fell away from duty another would take her place, and that vestals might come and vestals go but the light would shine forever.

Oh, my countrymen, each of us is a temple; within each of us was lit the sacred fire; within each of us are the better angels of our nature, whose eternal vigilance is need to keep the temple purer and the light trimmed and burning. As it is with the individual, so it is with the Nation. The grandeur of the Republic must always rest upon the nobility of the citizen.

Does the sacred fire burn low within me? Then woe unto me, for I have lessened the Nation's splendor. Has the light gone out of your life? Then woe unto you, for the Nation has lost a part of its glory.

To every man and woman who has listened to this address, to every man and woman who shall hereafter read it, I appeal.

Consecrate the temple; keep pure and perpetual the vestal service; for it is moral death to the individual to neglect the fire; it is moral death to the Nation to lose the light.

That peroration breathes a lofty and wholesome sentiment. He was a wonderfully well-informed man. He had been a great student and he was a great scholar. He seemed to remember everything that he had ever read. As was said of the able and brilliant Senator Morgan, of Alabama, "his mind was wax to receive and marble to retain."

He had his faults. Who has not? He made mistakes. Who makes no mistakes seldom makes anything. While I had disagreed with some of the positions that he had taken during his political career, I always admired his frankness, his courage, and his wonderfully brilliant intellect, and his abiding friendship for the masses always appealed greatly to me. I had read a great many things that he had written, and although I lived in a State adjoining his I had never seen him until he came here as a Senator from the great State of Georgia. I came to the Senate just three months before he did, having been elected to fill out the unexpired term of Senator John H. Bankhead. I was in the midst of the most difficult and stupendous fight in which I ever engaged as a national legislator.

I was convinced that the deflation policy inaugurated by Republican leaders in 1920 and carried out under the direction of Governor Harding, head of the Federal Reserve Board here in Washington, was the result of a conspiracy in which certain Wall Street bond sharks, financiers, and speculators were criminal participants, and I had resolved to acquaint Congress with the facts of deflation as I found them and to expose and condemn those whom I believed to be guilty of reprehensible conduct.

I was in the first stages of the long and strenuous fight when Senator WATSON arrived in the Senate. From the beginning he was heartily with me on the stand that I had taken, and during the first two or three days of his service here he came over to my desk, shook my hand, and said with deep earnestness, "Senator HEFLIN, you are right in this matter, and I want to commend you for the fight you are making."

"I am going to help you as soon as I feel a little better." In a few days I was again discussing the matter, and he arose and interrupted me with a very helpful suggestion. And from then on, until Congress adjourned on September 22, 1922, he made valuable contributions to the cause.

Among other things, I was charging the Federal Reserve Board with having permitted the Reserve Bank of New York to appropriate $25,000,000 to build a bank palace in that city, several million dollars of which should have gone to the Government in the form of a franchise tax, and it would have gone into the Federal Treasury as a franchise tax if the Federal Reserve Board had not permitted it to be turned over for the questionable purposes to which it was shamefully applied.

I had been calling attention to the necessity of protecting the Government against such extravagance and graft in the future and to the advisability of amending the law so as to limit the amount of money that could be appropriated in the future for the construction of Federal reserve bank buildings. He had assisted in passing the amendment which did that. He arose and said:

Mr. President, the country will be astounded at the profligate waste of public money in these banks. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] introduced the amendment designed to place a check upon the extravagance of these regional banks, and it is one of the best pieces of practical legislation that I have seen put through Congress.

* * * * * * *

The amendment of Senator HARRIS was adopted. It provided that no Federal reserve bank could hereafter appropriate more than $250,000 for the construction of any bank building unless it should first obtain the consent of Congress.

We were getting practical results from our fight on the strange, loose, and unbusinesslike conduct of the Federal Reserve Board. Time and again I had criticized Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, for permitting loans to be made to the cotton and grain speculators of New York, while he was refusing to permit loans to be made to farmers, merchants, and bankers in the South and West. It was during one of these discussions that Senator WATSON arose and said:

Mr. President, in the Atlanta Constitution of October 9, 1920, there appeared on the front page large headlines relating to an interview given out by Governor Harding at Birmingham. A subheadline reads as follows:

"Governor Harding emphatically states that bank [Federal reserve] is not an institution for lending money to farmers."

An official connected with the department of agriculture of Georgia had gone to Birmingham and pleaded with Governor Harding for loans to the farmers of my State. He was told, and the fact was published abroad, that the farmers need not expect any help from the Federal Reserve Board. The very next day cotton broke and went down 114 points. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] knows as well as any Senator here knows the disastrous effect upon the material condition of our people by this repeated, continued, distressing policy of contraction, and he knows that our people to-day are in the depth of despair, hardly knowing which way to turn for some gleam of hope.

* * * * * * *

He fully appreciated the distress and suffering that deflation had brought upon the people of his State and he bitterly denounced those who were responsible for the crime. On February 9, last year, when I was discussing a certain phase of the subject, he arose and said:

Mr. President, right there I will state for the information of the Senator [Mr. HEFLIN] that there was a citizen of Georgia who took $10,000 in Liberty bonds to Atlanta not long ago in the hope of borrowing money on them. He could not borrow one dollar. At that very time, however, such bonds were being bought in New York as rapidly as they could be put upon the market. I suggest to the Senator that the very policy which forced the remote banks to refuse to lend on Liberty bonds but which allowed money to be loaned for their purchase in New York naturally tended to depreciate their value in the agricultural States and forced them to sale in New York.

Mr. President, in describing the robbing process employed to destroy prosperity and produce distress and suffering among the people of the South and West I mentioned the fact that thousands of people had been driven to suicide by the cruel and distracting ravages of deflation and I referred to it as "murderous deflation." When I had finished, Senator WATSON arose and among other things said:

* * * The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] used the word "murderous," and that term is not too strong, for, indeed, that policy has caused men to murder themselves, and God only knows how many men have been driven to crimes that resulted in murder by the remorseless policy of the Federal Reserve Board.

Again, when I was discussing another phase of the subject, he came to my aid and said:

A few days ago there was brought to me from the reception room a card bearing the name of Mr. Will Kendrick, of Mayfield, Ga., a business man whom I have known for many years. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] perhaps knows him. He is a worthy gentleman and entirely trustworthy. Among other things which he told me, showing conditions in Georgia, was this: His son-in-law, a large farmer, found it necessary to run his farm on a basis of 15 plows less than he had been doing. That left him with 15 surplus mules, which, of course, he wanted to sell. There being no local demand for mules, he shipped them to Atlanta—a carload of mules. They were sold, and his net return from that carload of mules, which cost him $150 apiece two or three years ago, was less than $1 apiece for the mules, the net return being $12.50.

Mr. President, while I was excoriating the criminal deflationists he discussed with me in private conversation time after time the terrible conditions that deflation had brought upon our people, and he always manifested the deepest interest and the keenest sympathy for those who had been literally robbed by deflation.

When loans were denied them and their products were forced upon the market and sold at a price far below the cost of production, he knew that there was no necessity or justification for deflation, and he had the courage to strongly condemn those who planned it, brought it about, and made millions out of it, while they produced distress, poverty, and suffering amongst millions of American people.

Mr. President, for many years he published a weekly newspaper, and week after week his paper fairly bristled with interesting lines from his pungent pen.

Thousands and tens of thousands of people in Georgia and adjoining States read his paper, and thousands and tens of thousands became his devoted admirers and faithful followers.

They called him the sage of McDuffie and the tribune of the common people. The demands for him to speak at different points in the State were insistent and incessant. His appearance on the hustings in his State was the signal for the outpouring of the people by the thousands. Through his weekly paper and his speeches on the hustings he so aroused and captivated the masses of the people of Georgia that he became the most powerful single factor in the political affairs of his State.

For a quarter of a century he was the intrepid and invincible spirit guiding the tide of political battle in the proud old Commonwealth of Toombs and Hill and Stephens. He was long called the stormy petrel of Georgia politics.

It is an open secret that for years and years every man elected to the office of governor in the State of Georgia pointedly proclaimed his friendship for the sage of McDuffie and made it his business to boast everywhere that he had Tom Watson's support. The once poor, obscure country boy was now politically the foremost citizen in the State. In 1920 his beloved Georgia laid upon his brow the laurel wreath of her affectionate regard when she gave him her vote for President of the United States. This expression of admiration, confidence, and esteem touched him deeply. While we knew, of course, that he could not then be nominated as the Democratic candidate for President, he was sincerely grateful for the honor done him; but deep down in his soul there had long been the desire to be a Democratic United States Senator from the State of Georgia. Honors fell thick and fast upon him then, and when that honor came it was the climax and crowning glory of his political ambition, and his cup of joy was full and running over.

Mr. President, during his long, active, and stormy career there was one who kept sweet vigil in the home circle—one whose love-lighted watch fire burned beautifully and faithfully through the years for him—his noble and devoted wife. He dedicated one of his books to her in the following language:

Dedication to Miss Georgia Durham,

In whose pure affection and loyal soul a briefless young lawyer found favor in the good year 1877, and who not so very long afterwards became Mrs. Thomas E. Watson, and who has ever since walked the long path by his side, through health and through sickness, through joy and through sorrow, through sunlight and through the tempest, with the unfaltering devotion of the typical wife, and who now turns with him to face the afternoon of life without any sort of fear, and with the peace of soul that passes understanding.

Again, he said:

I am never so happy as when let alone by the outside world and left to the enjoyment of my own fireside and the companionship of my old sweetheart, whom I wooed and won when a poor and almost friendless boy.

TOM WATSON, like Cæsar and Thomas Carlyle, when reading or writing could not endure such a noise as the crowing of a cock. When I visited Hickory Hill, the home of Senator WATSON, on the sad occasion of his funeral, I went into his magnificent library and sat in the chair that he occupied as he wrote his Life of Napoleon and the history of the French people, and this beautiful little story was told to me about his thoughtful, devoted, and faithful wife: It was said that as he used to sit in his library and read and write the English sparrows would gather in the trees about the yard and chatter, to his great annoyance. His wife would sit in the yard and sew or knit or read, and she would throw stones into the trees to keep the birds away, and she kept the roosters from coming up and crowing near the library. That was the work of his old sweetheart contributing her part. Who knows just how much she did contribute to the writing of his great books by making things comfortable and pleasant for him during all that time?

One who knew Senator WATSON and Mrs. Watson well in their home life told me that she was his inspiration and good angel through all the years of their married life. Mr. President, I well remember when he came to Washington accompanied by Mrs. Watson and his two lovely granddaughters. There were two other persons from his home who belonged to his newspaper staff in Georgia, and Miss Orr, who came to be associated with him in the same work which was carried on here, and also to be members of his official force in his service as United States Senator from Georgia. I refer to Mrs. Lytle and Grover Edmundson, who are still carrying on the publication of his popular paper—the Columbia Sentinel.

I saw him go down the aisle with the senior Senator from Georgia, my good friend Senator HARRIS, to whom he later became devotedly attached, and take the oath of a United States Senator from the State of Georgia. I saw these galleries thronged with people who were eagerly looking down and asking to have TOM WATSON pointed out to them. You could hear them say, so the guides tell us, "He is the author of the greatest history of Napoleon and the French people ever written; we want to see him." All eyes were upon him, and when he came back to his seat the Democrats gathered around him and shook his hand and congratulated him. His face was wreathed with smiles. He was happy.

Through privations and poverty; through difficulties and disappointments; through the stress and storm of fierce political battles he had come triumphant. His dream had come true. His greatest ambition had been gratified. He immediately took up the duties of his office, and from the beginning handled them as one long accustomed to service in the Senate.

As Napoleon said, "One ages rapidly on the battle field." It was plain to us all that the long and strenuous battles that Senator WATSON had fought had drawn heavily upon his physical vitality. He was not in good health when he came here. But that did not keep him away from his post of duty. He was here day after day except when he was too feeble to come. Mr. President, he took a special interest in me and the work that I was doing here. He was my devoted friend, and I had learned to appreciate the noble qualities of his great mind and heart, and had come to be very fond of him. I miss him and I mourn with those who loved him.

He was here, although very feeble, on the last day of the session, when Congress adjourned September 22, 1922, and four days from that time he told the nurse who attended him in and "was not afraid to die." The death angel came for him that night, and he went away to the spirit world.

I want to read to you a beautiful prayer and a beautiful sentiment written by him at the beginning of the new year, 1922:

Deal gently with us in the new year, Father Time—
Give us strength to bear the cross, for we know that we must bear it;
Give us courage for the battle, for we know that we must fight it;
Give us patience to endure, for we know that we shall need it;
Give us faith in the right which no defeat can disturb and no discouragement undermine;
Give us the love of truth which no temptation can seduce and no menace can intimidate;
Give us the fortitude which, through the cloud and the gloom and the sorrow of apparent failure, can see the distant pinnacles upon which the everlasting sunlight rests;
Give us the pride which suffers no contamination, no compromise of self-respect, no willful desertion of honest conviction;
Give us the purpose that never turns and the hope that never dies.
And, Father Time, should the new year into which you are taking us have upon its calendar that day in which the few that love us shall be bowed down in sackcloth and ashes, let that day, like all other days, find us on duty, faithful to the end.

Mr. President, he remained on duty and died at his post when his labors of the session had ended.

In company with other Senators I journeyed with his remains to his last resting place. In every town in Georgia through which we passed the people thronged about the station to get a glimpse of the funeral train, and when we arrived in the little city of Thomson, where he had lived so long and where the people loved him so well, from 15,000 to 20,000 people were there. Everywhere there were banners and badges of mourning.

Those people had come from all over Georgia; come to pay to the memory of their dead chief the tribute of their love. I never saw at the grave of any public man more genuine sorrow, more heartfelt grief than I saw among the people of the State of Georgia at the grave of Senator WATSON. Peace to his ashes. God bless and comfort his loved ones.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, THOMAS E. WATSON did not have to be elected to office to prove his greatness. In many respects he has stood head and shoulders above his fellows as author, writer, historian, and statesman for over a quarter of a century. His sympathy for suffering humanity, plus his natural wisdom and large fund of acquired knowledge—the sequence of his untiring energy and industry—explain the secrets of his success.

The Story of France, The Life and Times of Thomas Jefferson, The Life of Napoleon, The Study and Story of the Old South, The Life and Times of Andrew Jackson, are treasure chests into which thousands of readers have dug in the days and years gone by, and they have always come up with hands full of sparkling gems of thought.

A man of strong convictions, possessing a copious vocabulary, he never lacked for the proper word, as orator or writer, to convey his meaning or depict his feelings. He has probably done more than any other man in his day and generation in the way of educating the masses.

One of his outstanding achievements in behalf of the farmers of the Nation was in securing the first appropriation in Congress for free delivery of rural mail. The 44,405 rural mail carriers, who are daily serving the 29,774,516 citizens of the United States, are living monuments to his foresight and interest in the people in the rural sections of the country, and as a result of the success of the rural system in America thousands of Canadian families are to-day enjoying the blessings of his efforts in this respect.

After having served in 1882–83 as a member of the Georgia House of Representatives, having been elected to that position as a Democrat, WATSON gained national fame by being elected to the National House of Representatives in 1891–1893 as a Populist.

While serving in the House he attracted nation-wide attention by his attacks upon the procedure of Congress and the personal habits of many Members. These attacks were responsible for his defeat for reelection in 1892.

Perhaps his outstanding effort as an author was his history of France, which was adopted by the public-school systems of France as a textbook. It has been said that this book was the best story of France that has ever been written. Senator WATSON dearly loved France, her history, and her traditions, although he had never set foot upon her soil.

During the period of his serious writing Senator WATSON was industriously and everlastingly fighting for the common people and their rights under this Government. He established a magazine, Watson's Jeffersonian, which upon its first issue became the most widely circulated political magazine published in the South and one of the most widely circulated in the country. His principal claim through the columns of this magazine was that the Democratic Party, as such, was not functioning in accordance with the principles laid down by Thomas Jefferson. His attacks in this way advanced him to a leading position in Georgia and southern politics among the so-called "common people," whose friend he ever was.

It is known that he never felt the call to serve them in any capacity but that he responded quickly and cheerfully, and threw himself in front and in the midst of every battle. He was a violent and pugnacious fighter—never known to give up—always ready to go to the firing line where he commanded and directed.

By his mental ability and capacity to receive and administer political and economic punishment in his continuous fight for human rights he attracted a personal and political following which later on rewarded the virtue of his position and activities by sending him to the Senate of the United States against the combined efforts of both the Democratic and Republican organizations of Georgia. At the time of his death he commanded the largest personal following in his native State of any politician in that State since the War.

As a serious writer of history Senator WATSON will live for ages after the vast majority of his contemporaries will have been forgotten.

His disbelief in the methods of newspapers of his time caused him to establish papers or magazines of his own, and he had no difficulty through these media in getting his ideas and views before the minds of a multitude of interested and principally sympathetic readers.

As author, scholar, historian, lawyer, citizen, and statesman THOMAS E. WATSON has left the indelible imprint of his life upon a nation that will gradually learn to love and appreciate his worth.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I was absent from the city and did not learn until late yesterday afternoon that to-day had been set aside to pay tribute to the memory of the departed Senator from Georgia, THOMAS E. WATSON. I shall therefore make no comment upon the activities that marked his tempestuous career, but confine myself solely to describing the Senator as he was known to me.

I now stand at the desk which has been assigned to me in this body. The one nearest to me on my left is the one that was assigned to the Senator whose memory we honor to-day. I had, therefore, an opportunity to observe him closely and to know him well. I shall attempt, in the few minutes that I shall consume, to leave a picture of him as it is painted in my memory.

In my memory appears a man of medium height; of classic features, with a noble brow; a shock of hair nearly gray; a figure so frail that it seemed impossible that he could last out the day; a skin as pallid as if death had already stilled the pulsing heart; an eye, however, always bright, sometimes beaming with pleasure, and often flashing with righteous anger inspired by the positions of those whom he thought were advocating the wrong; a mouth as tender as a child's or as firm as a Cæsar's.

Senator WATSON was, in appearance, a remarkable man. No one could have met him and forgotten him. It is doubtful if he ever had to recall his name to anyone who had ever met him, however slight the acquaintance might have been. There was something about him, that indescribable something we call personality, that made all turn to him.

They might have differed with him and did, doubtless, in many views he advocated. They might not always have agreed with the motives they thought inspired him, but no one could have come in personal contact with THOMAS E. WATSON and in his heart of hearts questioned either the sincerity of WATSON or the kindly disposition of his nature.

He has been referred to here to-day as "Fighting TOM WATSON," and yet I doubt seriously if any man ever sat in this Chamber who loved peace more, who loved gentleness more, whose heart was more filled with love of humanity and of kindness, than was that of the distinguished Senator whose memory we attempt to honor with these few brief tributes to-day.

It is too near to his going away, however, to form any accurate opinion of what will be the estimate of that generation that comes after us, of those who will be so far removed from the scene of conflict, that with dispassionate judgment they may appraise the activities which so engrossed his time.

I remember reading of the political activities of Senator WATSON when quite a small boy. I remember when those who did not know him ridiculed him, and those who did not understand him condemned him. Yet, even now, while the echoes of his voice in this Chamber are hardly stilled, so recent has been his going, all just men and women say that, looking back through the years, they can mark the sturdy, consistent course that THOMAS E. WATSON traveled. What is more, the things for which he was most condemned, the things for which he was most ridiculed, the things for which he was most hated are the things we now accept.

There was the Ocala platform, written in the State of my distinguished friend, the Senator from Florida. As I now recall, there were 12 demands in the Ocala platform. Those demands were looked upon either as the visionary dream of some irresponsible dreamer or else as the effort of some unpatriotic man to tear down the fabric of this Republic. Yet there is not one of those demands that has not been written into the laws of this land, either in its exact language or some modified form, and many of them are now regarded as conservative, we have progressed so far beyond them.

I recount that only for the purpose of showing that after awhile, when we may be able to detach ourselves from the conflicts which raged about him, we may discover that through all the years his was the one mind that held always the true vision, his the one heart that always beat in unison with the great fundamental principles upon which our Government has been founded.

I wish all could have known him. To know him was a revelation to me. I had thought of him as a turbulent man, as a man who engaged in conflict for conflict's sake, as a man who reveled in strife and whose heart was embittered with hatred. Yet, looking back over the months he and I sat here side by side in the Senate, I recall never to have heard him utter an unkind word of anyone who lived; I never heard an unchaste expression fall from his lips. He was as sweet, gentle, and courteous as human nature can be, always considerate of those with whom he dealt, always willing, wherever expediency alone was to be consulted, to yield to those who pressed their views upon him; but always, whenever principle was at stake, willing to take up the fight with the strongest.

Looking back over his career, it seems no one can justly point to a time when WATSON ever struck the weak or shunned conflict with the strong. He was willing always to concede to others the right of their convictions; always tolerant of opinions in conflict with his own. Always deferring, as I said, to his friends whenever a question of expediency alone was at stake, but I do not believe even his most carping critics, his bitterest enemies, could point to a single occasion when WATSON surrendered principle in order to advance his own interest. If he had sought only his own advancement, as some at times thought, there was not an office within the gift of the people of the State in which he was born that he could not have had. There was none in Georgia who would not have been glad to call him friend if he had been willing to sacrifice his principles merely to have friends. There was none, however radically he may have differed with him, who had not rather have had him on his side than have him against him, and therefore the knowledge that he did fight, always fought, but always fought for principle, I think should silence every critic and make all pause and meditate if it were not he who carried the true light.

Nothing is gained by fulsome flattery of one whose career is as well known as is that of Senator WATSON. Nothing we can say here will influence what his friends think of him, and I fear there is nothing we can say here that will soften the rancor of his enemies. There is nothing we can say, Mr. President, I am sure, that will help to fix the status of WATSON in the history that shall be written of him in the years that are to come. Therefore, all that we do is merely to record our own appreciation of his character. That is the only object I have, to say here these few things that give me that definite and certain and sure impression I have of the great Senator who sat at my left.

With some of his views I did not agree. I thought he was mistaken. I never thought, however, that he was not honest. I never doubted any statement he made where question of fact arose. I never suspected any motive that actuated him. I do not now believe and I do not believe anyone knowing him as I knew him, seeing him as I saw him, believed that any motive that was selfish or mean or little actuated him. He was subject to that infirmity from which all great men have suffered. He had strong likes and dislikes. He passionately loved his friends, and I think without disparagement I may say that he equally passionately fought those with whom he had a conflict.

He was strong is his love and strong in his hate, strong in his prejudices and strong in his powers of analysis. As conflicting as that statement may be, until one may be able to reconcile it he may never appreciate the composite character of THOMAS E. WATSON. He was not just one man. He had many phases. He loved social intercourse. He loved to sit down with his friends in private conversation. He loved the little things that make up life. He loved the little things that made up the lives of children and the people of restricted and narrow experiences. Fate had been unkind to him. The children that God had given him and in whom all his ambitions and his hopes centered God had taken away. He and Mrs. Watson and the little grandchildren were all the family circle left; all who stood within the sacred scope of family love. All the rest of his great heart went out to the people. Irrespective of color, of race, of creed, of position, or lack of it, he embraced all the world in his sympathies, in his hopes, in his dreams, in his aspirations for a future that should be better than anything the world had known.

Now, Mr. President, I felt a real loss when death claimed the distinguished Senator from Georgia. I felt a personal loss. I feel it now. I came to know him only recently. I had not gotten through with getting acquainted with him when death came. Every day some new phase of his many-sided nature was revealed, some new depth of learning that I had not dreamed he possessed; some new side of his always unfolding love for humanity was made manifest. I doubt that anyone who lived knew all his many sides, the many phases of this remarkable man. I believe that I shall never know another with the versatility that he possessed. As the writer of history, as the teller of stories, as the singer of songs, the propagandist, the proposer of legislation, the expounder of theories of government, he was equally at home in all these fields of human endeavor. He was as happy, however, to sit down with the little boys who were pages here on the floor of the Senate and discuss with them the little matter that appealed to them as was he to engage in discussion with the learned and the great. He traveled through all the phases of life, and he loved them all.

And let us hope now that all that perplexed him, all that troubled him, all the heart hunger, all the hopes unrealized, all the dreams unfulfilled, are no longer mysteries to him, and that with death came life and with the grave came realizations.

I hope so; I pray so; I believe so. Friend, companion, teacher, philosopher, scholar, statesman for a little while, to thee I gently say "Good night."

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, it was not my privilege to have a personal acquaintance with Senator THOMAS E. WATSON, of Georgia, but his personality and his career were of such a nature that they made an impression upon the entire country. I therefore knew him well even before I lived to serve in his State in the Army during the late war. There, close to his neighborhood, I realized much more keenly the force and the power of that personality.

I also at one time lived for five years in Bloomfield, Iowa, in the home town of Gen. James B. Weaver. General Weaver was the close political associate of THOMAS E. WATSON in the great Populist movement, and was its candidate for the Presidency when that movement was at its height. In that way I learned much of the purposes, platforms, and objects of that great movement.

I will have to admit with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] that in those days I was a scoffer against those prophets of the progress of our country. As I look back over it now I see things with a different view. The platform mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] has been fulfilled in every detail and even more. I believe in all 17 major propositions advocated by the Populists of the United States, advocated by Senator WATSON have now gone either into our statutes or into the Constitution of the United States. Had I known I was to be called upon to speak I should have had them all ready to review. I ask the privilege of inserting them later in my remarks.

I can at this time mention part of them. In addition to rural free delivery, the Australian ballot was a result of that agitation. The interstate commerce act grew out of the Populist movement. Our whole primary-election system, which, in my judgment, is doing more to make this a government of the people, by the people, and for the people than any other development, is likewise due to the Populist movement.

Then I can remember further back when we talked of the power of Congress to levy an income tax. The proposal was considered as radical, and WATSON and Weaver and others of the old pioneer leaders were derided for the radical views which they expressed; and yet that has gone into the Constitution of the United States. I remember when the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people was advocated by them, and that view met with derision and rebuke on the part of the wise statesmen of the generation; but now that is likewise a part of the Constitution of our country. I can remember when they also advocated prohibition and were described as belonging to the class of long-haired men and short-haired women, and yet to-day prohibition is a part of the basic law of our land. I also remember the scornful words which were uttered against them when they spoke in favor of woman suffrage; but that, too, has become a part of our Constitution.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say that to me nothing has occurred in American history more fittting than that the successor to this old Populist leader, THOMAS E. WATSON, should have been the first woman Senator in the Senate of the United States.

Pursuant to the permission given to insert in the RECORD a review of the measures pioneered and advocated by THOMAS E. WATSON, I here insert extracts from a speech by the Hon. William Jennings Bryan, made at Bloomfield, Iowa, August 15, 1915, upon the occasion of the dedication of the former home of Gen. James B. Weaver as a civic center. While this eulogy is in memory of General Weaver, Senator WATSON had a leading part in the same movement. Mr. Bryan spoke as follows:

First, there was the graduated income tax. Now, I advocated the income tax about 25 years ago, but this was 35 years ago, so that he was 10 years in advance of me in the advocation of the income tax. I did not advocate the graduated income tax. I commenced to advocate just the flat rate. I had been working along that line and I found there was resistance enough to the flat rate 25 years ago. In fact, I have been called down more for advocating the income tax than any one thing. In fact, when I look back at the measly 2 per cent tax that was cussed so much and now see a graduated income tax such as General Weaver began advocating 35 years ago, I am ashamed of the moderation that characterized me in my policy itself.

He advocated the establishment of the postal-savings bank 35 years ago. That is a good deal further back than most of us began to advocate it, and yet I see that the postal-savings bank is now in operation, and it is likely to grow in size and in the number of its departments rather than to decrease.

There was also the initiative and referendum. Well, I was surprised this morning when they told me that that was in his platform 35 years ago. I did not commence advocating the initiative and referendum until 19 years ago, the first platform in which it appeared, as far as I know. At least, it was the first Democratic platform. There may have been a Populist platform which contained it, but it was the first Democratic platform that contained it, the platform of 1896. It was adopted before I was nominated in Chicago. I was chairman of the committee which wrote the platform of the convention, and the Republican paper said the next morning that when Bryan wrote the platform of the initiative and referendum the delegates looked at each other and one member said to the other, "What is that?" and the Republicans said that that was a new kind of Democratic drink, and the Republican paper stated that immediately upon receiving that information it went through unanimously. I do not say this to criticize the paper, but a great many of the Republican papers were ignorant enough to think that anything new was a Democratic drink. I was prejudiced enough to think that anything the Democratic convention indorsed could not be anything but a drink.

Now, the paper that wrote that, and a few in my State, about five or six years ago had in the platform in the State the recommendation that they indorse the initiative and referendum, and the next legislature which passed the various bills passed one generally in favor of it; but here is General Weaver advocating the initiative and referendum 35 years ago.

The election of the United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. I commenced 25 years ago advocating the theory. He commenced 35 years ago. It was in my platform when I was 30 years old, and he had introduced a bill in Congress eight years before that, but he was ahead of the Congress, and so I was, for I came in two years before Congress did, and I was in Congress and had it passed for the first time in 1892, and had the honor of voting for it, and 21 years afterwards it became part of the Constitution. There you see that 30 years before Congress passed it he had it in his platform, and 21 years after Congress passed it it became a part of the Constitution, and it was 31 years before it became a part of the Constitution that General Weaver advocated it in his platform.

I have been more fortunate than was General Weaver. He was the pioneer and did this work long before the rest of us saw the need for it. But it fell to my lot as Secretary of State, 23 years after I began the fight for it—21 years after that it passed Congress, and it fell to my lot as Secretary of State to affix my signature to the last document necessary to make it a part of the Constitution of the United States.

He favored the 8-hour labor law, and I note here that this is now the law relating to Government employees, and it is also the law in most of the States. See what a wide range it has covered. See how he was seeking for the things that helped every class of the community. They were fundamental things. If anybody tells you that the public is not interested in labor laws unless they belong to the class that we call wage earners, do not let them deceive you. Society is interested in every part of this work. Your wage earner is a second group. He is next to the farmer. You have to rely upon the intelligence as well as upon the patriotism of all these parts of society, and man is driven from his work to his bed and from his bed back to his work again, and so he has no leisure time for the proper attention of his duties to his family or the proper attention to his civic duties; and you must not blame labor for not doing its duty as you see it if you do not do your duty to the laborer by giving him a chance to measure himself by giving him these responsibilities, both his family responsibility and the responsibility of citizenship.

General Weaver 35 years ago was also advocating the establishment of sanitary conditions in the industrial establishments, and note what progress we have made in these conditions.

Thirty-five years ago he was opposing the employment of children in industries. Nineteen States now forbid it, and Congress has recently created a Child's Welfare Bureau. He was the pioneer in every fundamental work. For if you do not take care of the child, how can you expect to avoid the suffering that follows the child when it is grown? If you allow greed and avarice to dwarf the minds and bodies of the children, how can you ever avoid the evils that follow, and not to those people only but to that society of which they are a part?

Thirty-five years ago General Weaver was demanding a Department of Agriculture and a Bureau of Labor Statistics. I suppose when he demanded a Department of Agriculture he thought he was going as far as he dared. But the insight that led him to believe that there ought to be a Department of Agriculture also led him to believe that there ought to be a Department of Labor. Is it not astonishing that he should make the demand for a Department of Agriculture at that time? We had a War Department, Navy Department, and Post Office Department, and a Department of State to deal with foreign relations. But think of it. It was after this platform of General Weaver's, 35 years ago, that we got the Agricultural Department to look after the interests of the largest crowd in this country, the farmers. He labored for it long before we had a Labor Department. If you look back to the platform of 1900, the second on which I ran, you will find that 15 years ago we were insisting upon the Department of Labor, and recently we have secured that Department of Labor, and I had the honor of serving in the Cabinet with the first Secretary of Labor—Secretary Wilson—and a splendid Secretary he is. But here is General Weaver 35 years ago asking for a Department of Agriculture and a Department of Labor, and then later a Department of Interstate Commerce.

Then, too, he said that the volume of money should be controlled by the Government and not by the banking interests.

My friends, he was the pioneer of the money question as well. He believed in the quantitative theory of money, and yet we had men as late as 19 years ago who did not understand the meaning of quantitative. We had men who talked about it as if it was difficult to understand, but it is the easiest question to understand that the people have ever considered. There were more people making speeches in 1896 than in any other campaign. They were men who had taken hold of the fundamental principles.

Now, I have never regarded myself as being precocious when a boy, nor that I was smarter than any other boy of my age, but, really, can you remember the time in your early life when you didn't have enough sense to know that when one end of the teeter went up the other went down? And I used to tell them that anyone could understand the question—could be able to comprehend the quantitative theory before they reached the age of full development, and that just as soon as we got far enough along in our mental awakening to know that when one end of the teeter or seesaw went up that the other end went down, then we could grasp the fundamental principle of the money question, which is as dollars rise property falls. Anything which will make dollars increase in purchasing power will make the prices fall, for they are a different system of the same principles. There he was 35 years ago asking that the Government and not private corporations should control the volume of money, and he made his fight for Government control, and we now have in the recent currency law triumph of the sovereign right of the Government to issue paper money, a thing which I did not expect to see in my time. I am very hopeful—and a man should have to be hopeful to be through what I have and still be cheerful. But I was not sanguine enough to believe that we would see what we have seen—a successful solution of the Government's right to issue money. And that reminds me of the man who was hurt and went to a doctor for a prescription. The doctor gave him some kind of ointment and gave him directions as to how to apply it and told him after a certain time he should come back and report. The day came when the patient returned, as directed. The doctor said, "Well, how is it?" The patient said, "I can not say; I can not say. I am sometimes better, and, doctor, it may get well, but I am afraid it won't be in my time." And here we have realized in our day what some people laughed at, and three decades ago General Weaver advocated what has now come true.

We had people 19 years ago who said that it did not matter whether we had much or little money, so it was good. It is mighty uncertain and unsatisfying to have some one describe in my presence a certain kind of food that is better than another kind and when I ask for it to be told that there is none. He was there at that time insisting that there should be more money.

There was then a circulation of $21 per capita where there is now a per capita of $35 in circulation, or an increase of over 50 per cent, and if we had not had the increase in the last 19 years above what it was then—and they said then that it was enough—if there had not been an increase it would not have been possible for the prosperity to have come which we have enjoyed in the last few years.

He advocated in those days the expansion of the powers of government. You know that government is of two kinds, coercive and cooperative. An anarchist says that when everybody is perfect we won't need any government, as everyone will be a law unto himself. He is deceived by looking at the coercive part of the government alone. It is true that as people grow better there will be less need of laws. Laws are not made for the masses but for a small part of the people. There is one thing your theoretical anarchist overlooks, and that is that the coercive part of the government will necessarily decrease in years as the people improve in morals, and the cooperative part of the government is bound to increase as the spirit of pride increases, for people will find it wise as well as best to do together that which they did formerly do at a greater cost and greater inconvenience alone. All of the great departments of our Government are illustrations. The Government itself is an illustration of the value of cooperation. Everything we undertake is an evidence of it. It is a test of a man's sanity that he can work together with other people, and here back 35 years ago General Weaver saw that with the growth, intelligence, morality, and advanced civilization there would be necessity for an expansion of governmental power. Since that time we have seen it in the Post Office Department, which has extended until it now takes the mail around to the houses in the city and the country, and I think the time will come when we will use the same mail for accumulating votes, and we may see it used for the purpose of gathering votes of those who are away from their homes. One of the things they have as an object is the bringing of the Government nearer the people. Make the Government an instrument for the accomplishment of the peoples' will and the peoples' good. A question he was a pioneer in.

Now, those are some of the things he advocated 35 years ago, and then as he went along he kept advocating other things as he came in view of them. Among the things that he advocated in that time were woman suffrage and the submission to a vote of the people the questions of the manufacture and sale of liquor. You will find he had confidence in the people; that he trusted them; that he was willing to let them decide the questions affecting them, and, my friends, that is the test of democracy.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there are some whose nerves fail and whose courage falters in the face of impending danger. Upon the high seas the mighty ship may toss and roll as the gathering storm flashes its lightning bolts across the heavens, sending forth its thundering roar far and near and lashing deck and mast and spar with spray from its mad and angry billows to the consternation of those aboard.

Upon the field of battle amid the clashing steel of mighty legions the rumblings of belching cannon, the shouts of advancing hosts, and groans of dying thousands, one of faint heart and of little courage succumbs to intrepidation.

In the forum, on the hustings, in the court room, and at the publicist's desk, with the sharp currents of controversy, the exchange of opposing views, this departed colleague to whom to-day we pay tribute never lost his courage or surrendered a conviction. Whether receiving the wild acclaim of his followers or the scornful look and cynical anathemas of his political enemies, he continued unmoved, persistent to the last, to wield the power of his masterful pen or the persuasive qualities of his eloquent tongue.

Until Senator WATSON became a Member of this body I, too, had formed an unfavorable opinion of the man. He and I had differed on so many public questions, and I had read such accounts of his stormy career that I was somewhat prejudiced against him; but, sirs, it was not long after he took his seat in this Chamber until, under the spell of his charming personality, his uniform courtesy, and his gracious manner, I grew to like him as a man and ere long to count him as a friend.

Few men in all the history of this country ever encountered sharper contests and sailed upon stormier political waters than did Senator THOMAS E. WATSON. Endowed with an intellect that was almost superhuman, with a brilliance that scintillated, and a store of information that was always ready, it seemed that he felt at all times the mastery of his position and welcomed controversy. Any position that he took upon any measure was naturally a strong position. Strong characters can not act otherwise. He won and held throughout his eventful career devoted followers and loyal friends. He naturally made and maintained bitter enemies.

Others have spoken of the power of his eloquence, the influence of his individuality, the qualities of his heart and mind, the influence of his writings, his devotion to home and fireside, his loyalty to friends, and I shall not detain the Senate by a further reference to those qualities that have been so eloquently alluded to to-day by others. I would say, though, Mr. President, that Georgia, great in her wonderful resources, rich in the character of her people, as she has always been—a State which has given to the Nation many distinguished sons and daughters; statesmen, warriors, and orators, whose names are emblazoned in the history of the country—she has in THOMAS E. WATSON contributed to the Nation a man who will occupy a high place among the historians and literary geniuses of his time.

I sometimes think, Mr. President, that here, as we exert ourselves day by day in what we believe to be for the general welfare of the Nation, receiving a compensation that some people may think too great, but which under the necessities and circumstances of the day is meager—incurring enemies in debate, creating critics throughout the country, meeting unjustifiable attacks from political enemies—public service is not worth the while, and despite the friends we make our humble efforts are little appreciated. But, Mr. President, as I journeyed to Georgia with the funeral party that attended the obsequies of our departed friend and colleague my feelings underwent a change. I shall never forget the sight that I beheld at Augusta and the little way stations as the train moved on to the little village in which this mighty gladiator had won his spurs, carved his future course, and made his name a household word not only in Georgia but throughout our country. There, in the thriving and historic city of Augusta, were assembled thousands, surging forward to catch a glimpse of the casket that held the remains of their former idol, and along the route to Thomson at every little station were old men and young, wives and maidens, standing in subdued silence to pay their last respect to their fallen leader.

And in the little town of Thomson, where stands the courthouse that had first echoed with his fiery eloquence, within the bar of which his young and unknown personality first threw itself upon his countrymen, a personality through whose persuasive qualities in after years was to conquer opposition, steal away hearts, and dethrone judgment.

I saw gathered around that little courthouse and in the streets and along the roads and around the station men and women of Georgia who had come from the hills and the mountains and the valleys, from the workshops and the counting places, hundreds of miles away, sleeping in their automobiles the night before within the yard of his old home, hallowed by his footprints, to pay their last tribute to the memory of him whom they had followed through the vicissitudes of an eventful political career, and whose devotion was so marked as to amount almost to idolatry. Never in the history of the little village was such a concourse gathered; never in the life of those people had anything happened that so touched and moved their hearts. I saw at the grave the stoic faces of old men wrinkle and tremble under the impulse of their love for their hero. I saw his former friends walk along the road immediately preceding the funeral procession silently bearing their weight of grief; and when I beheld these sights I thought that service here after all is worth the while, and that our people, even though sometimes we forbear, do appreciate it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, of THOMAS E. WATSON as Senator I shall not speak. Others have noted his services in this chamber. I prefer rather to acquaint you with his life, which is a part of the history of my State.

About 1750 a Quaker colony from North Carolina came into east Georgia, and among those colonists were the ancestors of THOMAS E. WATSON on both sides of the house—the Watsons and the Maddoxes.

Of his family, although the name of Horton is used, Mr. Watson in his book, "Bethany," a story of the Old South, writes:

> We Hortons were a family of middle-class farmers. We had never been anything else. We never expected to be anything else. Our condition was good enough for us. We had plenty of land. We had always had it. From the time that the original Horton came down into east Georgia, along with a Quaker colony, from North Carolina, which took possession of a tract of forty thousand acres, we had occupied the comfortable position of local landowner.

That, Mr. President, was the condition of his family before the War between the States. After the lurid flame of war had swept his State, and particularly that portion of his State in which he resided, he found his condition quite different.

He was born September 5, 1856, on the old plantation homestead in Columbia, now McDuffie County, Ga.; son of John S. and Ann Eliza (Maddox) Watson. He received a common-school education. In 1872 he entered Mercer University, but was compelled to leave at the end of his second year, his means being exhausted. With a pittance of $6.50, received from the sale of some old but highly prized books given him by his father, he started out to make his way in life. In 1874 he went to Screven County, Ga., where he taught school for two years. It was during those two years, 1875 and 1876, that he read law at night, and he is authority for the statement, as noted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], that the reading was done by the light of the pine-knot.

In November, 1876, he began the practice of his profession at Thomson, Ga.; and until his untimely end on September 26, 1922, he maintained his law office at that place, though he had retired from active practice many years before. His fees for the first year, as also noted by the Senator from Alabama, were $212 gross; the second year $474. It was during the second year of his professional life that he contracted to buy one of the farms formerly owned by his father, and upon this farm he established his father, mother, and brothers and sisters. His practice gradually grew, until at the time of his retirement from active practice, though a country lawyer, he himself was authority for the statement that his annual income amounted to more than $12,000.

In 1878 he married Miss Georgia Durham, daughter of Dr. George W. Durham, of Thomson, Ga., and this gentle woman survives him, though the children born of the union have all passed away. Mr. WATSON's references to this gentle woman, her perfect self-sacrifice, her patient, loyal, inspiring love, breathe the spirit of a better world.

Mr. WATSON served one term of two years in the lower house of the Georgia Legislature, declining reelection in 1884.

In 1888 he was elector for the State at large on the Democratic ticket, and stumped the State for Cleveland and tariff reform. In 1889 he was elected as a member of the Fifty-second Congress, on the Farmers' Alliance platform. This organization at Indianapolis, in 1891, called upon every Congressman who had been elected on its platform to abide by its principles, regardless of caucus dictates. Mr. WATSON heeded the call. His campaign for reelection was the most heated ever known in Georgia, and only men who were at that time citizens of Georgia can imagine the bitterness of it. Words will not convey an idea of the bitterness with which he was attacked or the devotion with which he was defended, not only in his congressional district but throughout Georgia. On the face of the returns he was defeated. The election was contested by Mr. WATSON, but his contest was unavailing.

In 1893 Mr. WATSON campaigned the State, and on one occasion during this campaign was a guest in my father's home, when I saw him for the first time. He was then the storm center of politics in Georgia. Living practically across the State from me, I saw him but seldom during the intervening years, once in the rôle of counsel for the defense in a celebrated murder trial; and the brilliancy of his intellect and the boldness of his attack are yet impressed upon my mind.

At that time, and at the time of his retirement, Georgia had no advocate the equal of Mr. WATSON. He was especially strong on the cross-examination of witnesses, but his peculiar strength lay in the magnificent manner in which he marshaled his facts for presentation to the court and jury.

On the stump few men in or out of Georgia thirty years ago could measure swords with Mr. WATSON in political debate.

During his term in Congress Mr. WATSON voted for the eight-hour law, led the debate for the bill which required railways to equip their cars with automatic couplers, and introduced the first resolution ever passed by Congress providing for the free delivery of mail outside of towns, villages, and cities.

In 1896 the St. Louis Populist convention endorsed William J. Bryan, the Democratic nominee, for President, and nominated THOMAS E. WATSON for Vice President. In 1900 he was nominated for President by the People's Party, and made an active campaign.

The formative period of his life was spent in poverty. Writing of Alexander H. Stephens, the Vice President of the Confederacy, he said:

> Later in his life Mr. Stephens would say to me—to warn me, I thought—that in the earlier stages of his career he had allowed his temper too much play. But, by way of excuse, he said that he was a poor boy, with no influential friends, and that many a time he thought his opponents "looked down on him" because of his poverty, and that they were trying unfairly to "run over him." Those who have started from the bottom, as "Little Alec" did, will know what that feeling is, and will look upon his errors of tongue and temper with infinite compassion.

Here we have, no doubt, a key to Mr. WATSON himself.

Senator WATSON possessed the imagination, the genius, and the soul of a poet, as has been noted. He was a great publicist and author, editing many newspapers and magazines, always consecrated to the service of the common man. He nevertheless gave to the world many notable books. Among these were "The Story of France," "Life and Times of Andrew Jackson," "Life of Thomas Jefferson," "Life of Napoleon," "Bethany, a Study and Story of the Old South," "Handbook of Politics and Economics," and other historical and controversial books.

It will always remain a remarkable fact that an unknown backwoods Georgia lawyer, who himself never visited France, who himself had no access to intimate sources of French history, should have written a book which not only in America but in France itself is recognized as one of the most accurate histories of that country.

He loved the common man. He was his champion, his tireless thinker, worker, and dreamer. His passion was always for the weak, and he often thought himself persecuted for those he loved. His tireless working and dreaming for the common man is that which entitles Mr. WATSON to the almost unparalleled love and devotion of the common men of Georgia who loved him through the years until his death. Whatever may have been Mr. WATSON's faults of passion, whatever may have been his errors of judgment, it can not be questioned that he dreamed for his people, for his State, and for his Nation the most beautiful dreams that ever inspired a poet. He believed that here in his own land and under his own flag should yet take form and substance all of those beautiful dreams that have inspired, in every age, the true and genuine lovers of men.

The common man, in turn, believed in Mr. WATSON; believed that he was incorruptible, unselfish, and unafraid. Strong men wept when the news came of his death.

His mind was rich in historical events. He was one of the readiest public men in his State. He was great as an orator, as a historian, and as a leader. When once he had taken his position, he maintained it to the end. He never surrendered. He respected those who differed from him. He had slight respect for those who always pretended to believe with him. About him the fiercest passions of love and hate played for a full third of a century. He was essentially, in his public career, the man of storm, yet, in his calmer moments, the man of humility. Some years ago he wrote:

> "When I come to face my Father, I want to be able to say to Him: "Father, take pity on me; it was You who made me just what I was. With all my raging passions and disfiguring imperfections, You sent me into the wicked world, where there was so much that I could not understand. I know that I've sinned, deeply and repeatedly, but oh, my Father! I did try to please You. Often guilty of wrongdoing, I strove ever to get right, and stay right. I've done the very best I could to be a just man, a high-minded man, a pure man, a good man."

After many crushing defeats, many heartaches and bitter disappointments—disappointments and defeats that would have discouraged lesser men—Mr. WATSON came to the Senate in March, 1921.

Throughout his public life he labored unceasingly for the principles he loved. To borrow the figure of another, like the patient weavers across the sea he worked, perhaps, on the wrong side sometimes, but he worked ever for the right side as he saw it.

His own words, recited by the Senator from Ohio, spoken before the Legislature of his State forty years ago in tribute to the life, character, and public service of Alexander H. Stephens, his boyhood friend, his hero ever, may be fittingly spoken here:

> He fell asleep like a child, weary and worn. Great Nature, the common mother, holds him tenderly to her bosom. When he shall awaken, it is inspiring to believe that he shall greet the morning in a land where there is no night, where the skies are undimmed by a cloud, where the feet bleed upon no pathway of stones, and the head wears no crown of thorns.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions submitted by my colleague [Mr. HARRIS].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate, under the order entered yesterday, take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, January 22, 1923, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 21, 1923.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee as Speaker pro tempore.

Rev. Page Milburn, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in whom we live, and move, and have our being; we worship Thee; we laud and magnify Thy name. Oh, that all men would turn their hearts toward Thee, and own Thy lordship over them.

We have all sinned and come short of Thy glory. For Thy Son's sake pardon our many offenses, and give us Thy peace.

We thank Thee for the magnanimous spirit which impels compatriots to justly weigh one another's virtues and tireless service. May this occasion incite Try servants to nobler living and generous emotions. May this Nation ever delight in deeds of virtue as well as ever take pride in its great wealth and eminent accomplishments.

Now unto Him that is able to keep us from falling, and present us faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the reading of the Journal of yesterday will be postponed until to-morrow.

There was no objection.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE PADGETT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the special order for to-day.

The clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. TURNER, by unanimous consent—

Ordered, That Sunday, January 21, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a resolution which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 486.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT, late a Member of this House from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, our departed friend once said in paying tribute to an honored Member of this House:

As the cycle of the years turn, one by one we drop out, one by one we lay down our labor and cease our toil.

He was then doubtless thinking of the time when his turn would come to lay aside all earthly cares; when he would set sail for that mysterious realm from whence no traveler returns.

Mr. PADGETT was my immediate predecessor, and I felt greatly honored when the people he represented so long and faithfully selected me to fill out his unexpired term. While it is a pleasure for me to take up the work where he laid it down, and to speak words of praise for his noble and exalted life, yet it brings sadness when I realize that he has gone forever. I knew him well for more than 20 years; I knew him as a private citizen, I knew him as an official, I measured lances with him on the battle field of politics, and under all circumstances I knew him as a true, polite, high-class gentleman.

Had he lived until November 28, 1922, he would have been 67 years of age; was born in Maury County, Columbia, Tenn., in 1855; died at his home in Washington, D. C., August 2, 1922. His remains were conveyed to his old home at Columbia and laid to rest in Rose Hill Cemetery among relatives and friends who had gone before. He was the son of John B. and Rebecca Phillips Padgett, long prominent in the history of his native county.

Mr. PADGETT was thoroughly educated; received his early education in the ordinary private schools of Maury County. In October, 1873, he entered the sophomore class of Erskine College, Due West, S. C., graduating in 1876 with the degree of A. B., which college conferred in June, 1916, the degree of LL. D. Soon after leaving college he began the study of law and was admitted to the bar and began practicing in 1877 and continued in active practice at Columbia until he began his successful political career. He was one of the Democratic electors for the State in 1884; in 1898 he was nominated and elected to the State Senate of Tennessee and served for a term of two years. In 1900, after one of the most noted campaigns in the history of the Seventh Congressional District of Tennessee, he was nominated and elected to the Fifty-seventh Congress and has been reelected to each succeeding Congress up to and including the Sixty-seventh, and had he lived until the 4th of March he would have served for 22 consecutive years, serving longer as a Representative in Congress from the seventh district than anyone who had ever represented it and longer as a Representative from the State than anyone else, with the exception of Hon. John A. Moon and Hon. Thetus W. Sims. This is a great record and a record that but few men achieve in this life. This demonstrates his popularity among those who knew him well and speaks volumes for him as an honorable, upright citizen and Representative.

He was a regent of the Smithsonian Institution for many years and a distinguished member of the National Monetary Commission. During his long term of service he was a member of several important committees, and while active and attentive in performance of his duties wherever placed, he became more deeply interested in the Naval Affairs Committee than any other. For several years prior and during the World War he was chairman of this powerful committee and studied the intricate problems connected therewith so intently that he became the recognized authority on naval affairs, and his wise counsel and advice no doubt had much to do with the successful operation of the Navy during the war, and kept it free from scandals and grafts that some people claim were prevalent in other departments of our Government. He probably had a better knowledge of naval affairs than any other man who ever served in Congress, and watched with pride its growth as it became one of the greatest navies in the world.

In 1880 Mr. PADGETT was united in marriage to Miss Ida B. Latta, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sims Latta, of Columbia, and for 42 years of their ideal married life he was a devoted husband and loving companion. He was almost a lifelong member of the Presbyterian church, and his life embraced everything that stood for good and was a definition of a Christian gentleman. He was a kindly, genial friend to all; he was of modest demeanor, gentle in his manner, considerate of the feelings of others and unselfish in every phase of life; his affable disposition, his honorable life and integrity of mind radiated and permeated those around him.

Mr. Speaker, I have not words to adequately express the appreciation and high value of the service Mr. PADGETT rendered to his friends and people not only in the larger affairs of life but those of minute value—he was ever ready and willing to listen and consider the wishes of the urchin as well as those of intelligence and celebrity. His services were marked by fidelity to duty which was the outstanding quality in his public work. Knowing Mr. PADGETT as I did I can thoroughly appreciate the devotion to him on the part of his constituents; he was truly their Representative and their interests to him were paramount.

In his successful walk in life he did not covet fame and notoriety and when they came his way as the result of hard work and constant attention to his duties in office he was found to be the same undaunted man of sterling qualities. His career in Congress won for him much admiration and devotion from his colleagues and the mention of his name seems to echo love and esteem for him.

To his family he was ever held on the pedestal of love as the faithful loving husband, kind, gentle, patient, and loyal father and while they bemoan his loss it is a sweet consolation to them to know that his life in the family circle and before the world was one beyond reproach and his memory to them will ever be a guiding star.

In conclusion may I add—while we have been happy to know and associate with him in this life may we hope to associate with him again when we reach the other shore—

For Christ is born of Mary,
And gathered all above,
While mortals sleep, the angels keep
Their watch of wondering love.
O morning stars, together
Proclaim the holy birth!
And praises sing to God the King,
And peace to men on earth.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to know our departed friend and colleague, LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT, during the entire term of his service, and I held him in highest regard and esteem as a man, as a friend, and as a legislator.

Early in the service of our departed colleague he came to be recognized as an able and industrious member and as a forceful and convincing speaker, and as time passed and responsibilities of the first magnitude were placed upon him he proved himself worthy of those responsibilities and a wise, able, and successful legislator. No man, during my service here, has displayed a more thorough acquaintance with the legislation placed in his charge than LEMUEL PADGETT—none has handled legislation more diplomatically, more successfully, than he. His country and his countrymen owe him a debt of gratitude for highly important service, splendidly performed in a crucial period and under trying conditions.

But, Mr. Speaker, fine and inspiring as was the record of our departed colleague as a legislator, he left even a more enviable record here as a man and as a friend. The best of men find it difficult to preserve at all times an attitude of fairness and courtesy in the earnest and emphatic exchange of argument and opinion in the fierce running fire of debate. Our friend was one of those rare individuals who always possessed his soul in patience and, while an earnest contender for his opinion, bridled his temper and maintained an attitude of unruffled affability. He was the most kindly and considerate of men and his attitude toward his colleagues, even at times when the tides of conflicting opinion ran highest, was one of uniform politeness and consideration.

In the passing of our colleague, LEMUEL PADGETT, Tennessee lost a splendid and stalwart son; the people of his district a faithful and efficient representative; this House a beloved and respected Member; and all of us a good and kindly friend.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, we come to-day under the appropriate custom of commemorating the passing away from mortal life and the scent of action of our colleague who has been piloted to "the misty dim regions of Weir."

The pale messenger that never tires and never pities did on the 2d day of August, 1922, knock upon the door and reach upon the inexorable roll and call the name of LEMUEL PHILLIP PADGETT, and guide him into that radiant hereafter of which hope is the creator and faith the defender; a soul that needed no cleansing to fit it for the companionship of the just.

When the news was heralded of his death, the people of a great and prosperous State mourned, for a true son had passed to the Great Beyond. A nobler man never lived; hospitable, gentle, calm, self-possessed, self-contained. A gentleman in honor, in manner, and innate refinement. He was everything that a man should be to be respected, admired, and loved, and hence was held in the highest esteem by all with whom he came in contact.

By his life we have a verification of the poem which says:

Our lives are songs; God writes the words;
But we set them to music at pleasure;
And the song grows sad or sweet or glad
As we choose to fashion the measure.

He laid hold of his opportunities and nobly and grandly he rounded out a magnificent character, which after all is what marks the measure of the fullness and the grandeur of man.

Mr. PADGETT was appointed a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. During my association of six years with him on the Naval Affairs Committee I learned to know him intimately and greatly admired and respected him. He was true to his country, true to his duties, true to his associates, and to his fellowman.

He was the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House from the Sixty-second to the Sixty-fifth Congress, inclusive. His entire service on the committee covered a period of 18 years, during which time more constructive legislation was enacted for the Navy than at any other time during its history. He was by far the best informed man on naval affairs in Congress; his mature judgment and his views were most generally accepted as the final word.

Under his chairmanship the bill carrying the largest amount of money ever appropriated for naval purposes was enacted into law. He believed in a strong Navy and that whatever naval preparation the Government should ever undertake should always be bound by the needs of the Nation, having regard for our position among the States of the world, the location of our possessions, the extent and the routes of our trade, the policies we may adopt in our international relations, and the dangers of the future which might threaten us.

He possessed a remarkably retentive memory; and could quote laws bearing on naval matters that had been passed many years ago. His place will indeed be hard to fill, and his loss to the committee, as well as to the House and country, can not be measured.

He served with courage and manly bearing; with no thought of self. He was a strong party man and had the confidence of his party associates, and the respect of his political opponents, because of his loyalty, fidelity and strict adherence to Democratic doctrines. He was indeed a patriot; he loved his State and his country and by his death the people whose commission he held lost a true, faithful and efficient public servant. He was a man of great ability; when he rose to speak, all the authority of truth and all the dignity of virtue rose with him.

He has gone out into the golden glories of the sunset and though his hands be forever folded upon his breast the harp strings touched by his fingers have not ceased to vibrate, and the voice of his minstrelsy is not hushed, the songs which he sung still linger, and the echoes of his music will forever cheer our hearts.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, it is to me a privilege and an honor to join in paying tribute to the life, character and memory of our departed friend and colleague, Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT, whose kindly spirit and gentle nature endeared him to all his colleagues, particularly to the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Those of us who had the privilege of this close contact with him fully appreciated his many excellent and truly admirable qualities.

The many years of faithful service that he gave to his country in this important branch of our Government is sufficient in itself to fully establish the high esteem and regard in which he was held by his constituents. However, Mr. PADGETT's influence and service were not confined by the boundaries of his congressional district. He was a national figure largely because of his detailed and accurate knowledge on naval affairs. He was a sincere and firm believer in the importance of the Navy and its proper maintenance. Mr. PADGETT had for years been a close student of naval affairs and became a veritable storehouse for information on the Navy. His opinions and advice on matters pending before the committee were always eagerly solicited and most highly regarded. Truly, his distinguished service to the Navy will always be a monument to his memory.

He had a big heart. It often impressed me as being the kind of heart that filled the bosoms of David and Jonathan, and we all remember the kindly manner in which he treated all the members of the committee.

He was a great believer in the Navy. I have often heard him say that the Navy was one of the great arms of the Government, never caused a war or induced any of its citizens to go to war, but that its sufficiency and strength were the means of keeping us out of war by instilling respect and regard for our Government. He loved to dwell upon the humanitarian services of the Navy. I remember on one occasion his speaking of the time when the battleship fleet was making its cruise around the world. The fleet was slowly steaming up the Red Sea when word came of the terrible earthquake disaster in Sicily. The admiral quickly assembled the medical stores and rushed the big supply ship forward to aid the people of this stricken island. Mr. PADGETT seemed to dwell upon those humanitarian phases of our Navy and point to the Navy as a great instrument for maintaining peace and not an instrument for causing war.

I do not know that any better tribute can be paid to Mr. PADGETT than to quote some of the words that he himself uttered at the funeral of our lamented colleague, Mr. William J. Browning, who had served with him for many years on the Naval Affairs Committee, which words seem to be particularly applicable to Mr. PADGETT himself. He then said:

Permit me to say that he was in deed and in truth a friend of the Navy. There was never any time that his faith in the Navy faltered or that his efforts failed. He was true to a deep-seated conviction that the Navy was one of the great and honored instrumentalities and agencies of our Government, challenging the admiration and deserving of the esteem and love and affection of the American people, and he never lost sight of an opportunity to render every service and every assistance he could, not only for its maintenance, but for its uplift and its stability.

Mr. PADGETT exhibited a divine trait of human nature, and that beautiful spirit that seemed to permeate his whole thought and action, when he closed his address with with these words, applying them to Mr. Browning, but which I think apply equally to him:

* * * He had a wealth of character, a richness of soul, that moth and rust could not corrupt and thieves could not break through and steal—a wealth and a richness that he could take with him when he met his God.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, we come into the world and we play our part upon the stage and we pass on. Some play a conspicuous and some an inconspicuous part. The man whose memory we are here to-day to honor was conspicuous in the Nation's life. He loved the people who honored him by sending him here. He endeavored to speak their minds and express their views. He was a modest man. He had no seeming sense of humor as far as I was ever able to discover, but he was serious, earnest, untiring in his work, devoted to the Nation that he loved, and unselfish to the utmost limit. He was a man that you could not help loving when you knew him. He was not much given to social affairs, and he did not become intimately acquainted with a great many members of the House; but what a worker he was, and what a record he left behind! Entering service on the Naval Affairs Committee when the Navy was an inconspicuous part of the Nation's defensive activities, he served so long that he came to see it become the greatest navy in the world. As a minority member of the Naval Committee he served with my former colleague, George Foss, who for a long time was chairman of that committee, and these two men, one the chairman and the other the ranking minority member, I think had more to do with the legislative upbuilding of America's great navy than any other two men in America's life. The people of his State should feel proud of the record he has left behind, for no man who ever served here left a better record. The acid test came during the great World War. That was the period that tried men's souls, tried their patriotism, tried their endurance. Mr. PADGETT had patriotism, he had devotion, he had endurance. He was always ready to meet the issue, whatever it turned out to be. He stood like a rock, side by side with the great Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, whose responsibility then was to fight the great war in which America was engaged.

There never was a question about what Mr. PADGETT would do to meet the needs of the Navy during that trying period. I was happy always to follow him in what he recommended we should do, for we men who voted to declare war stood shoulder to shoulder without respect to party, firm in our determination to leave no stone unturned and no facility unsupplied in order that the Commander in Chief of the military and naval forces of the country might be properly equipped to do the thing which our votes had imposed upon him to do. I was proud to see the position that Mr. PADGETT took always in this great conflict. He led the forces that shaped the policy that builded the Navy in the greatest war that was ever fought since the dawn of civilization. And what a privilege that was, to be the leader at such a time, in such a country, and for such a cause. He carried his honors and his responsibilities with a modesty that was sublime. No man was ever more modest or more sincere or more certain of what he was about to do. He never assumed a superiority, he assumed no dictatorial attitude, but he was strong in the faith that what he did was right, honest, with an integrity that knows no turning, with an Americanism that never failed.

He came into life and performed his part to the great delight of those who knew him, and to the great benefit of those who may read the record for their future guidance. He was as unselfish as any man I ever knew. He knew his facts in everything he undertook. He was able to present a case convincingly, clearly, and logically. He had a temperament that fitted him peculiarly for the burdensome task that he had to perform during a burdensome period. And what a great good fortune it was that during such a period the Nation had such a man!

We come not to mourn but to praise. I think that the work he did while in life will live in the hearts of his countrymen for all time to come, and those who read the record of his accomplishments and achievements will be glad to emulate the task that he performed. He left a lesson for young America which means patriotic fervor and devotion to the country, unselfishness in action, and readiness to do at a period when action becomes the duty of every man.

It is a wonderful thing to be a patriot in the proper sense. I wonder if I might take the liberty to tell you what I think patriotism is in the sense that I understood Mr. PADGETT to be a patriot. Patriotism, according to my viewpoint, as I read him, means love of country, loyalty to its life and will, love tender and strong, tender as the affection of a son for a mother, strong as the pillars of death, shrinking from no sacrifice, and seeking no reward except the country's honor. Patriotism is the vital spark, as I understood Mr. PADGETT to read it, of the Nation's honor, the strong shield of the Nation's safety, the living fount of the Nation's prosperity. We will not bid him good-by; he will be with us; we honored him in life, and we honor his memory now that he has passed away.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the State of Tennessee is notable for the contributions that it has made to the life of the Nation by furnishing strong, capable, courageous leaders. In that contribution none stands out, I think, with greater courage and with greater credit to himself and his State and Nation than does Mr. PADGETT. The most striking characteristics of our friend were the remarkable poise that he always maintained, his ability at all times to not permit upon the part of others either the prejudices or the passions of the hour, or even lack of information on the question that was very dear to his heart, the United States Navy, to obscure in his mind the things that were to be done in the way of legislation. It was interesting to one who studied the different methods of different leaders on this floor to study the method of Mr. PADGETT when he was responsible for legislation. I think the only thing that possibly ever aroused anything like a lack of poise, a resentment, and caused him to speak with any extraordinary degree of warmth was when someone, either through ignorance or through the prejudices that may have been aroused by something unfortunate, spoke slightingly of the personnel of the United States Navy.

Then it was that our friend showed a feeling that was deep, and the only feeling that ever seemed to threaten to overthrow his perfect control and poise on this floor. Another striking characteristic of Mr. PADGETT was that in spite of his practical view of things, in spite of the intense practical efforts that he put forth, first as a lawyer, where he was very successful and honored in his home, and afterwards as a legislator, and as one responsible more than anyone else, I think, in the last 10 or 15 years for the development of the United States Navy—I say, in spite of the practical grind in the performance of these tasks and the engaging in that line of thought that would have a tendency to drive out all emotionalism and all spiritual contemplation, yet, in spite of those things, those who enjoyed the close, intimate friendship of Mr. PADGETT discovered that there was no man in this House whose spiritual life, reflections, and mediations, were richer than his. And I think this was largely responsible for the happiness that all of us realize that he enjoyed. To some he had no sense of humor, but to me there were times when he had a very choice sense of humor. The sum of it is that when you look back and contemplate and try to estimate his character, judging by the external things, you come to this one conclusion, that here was a strong, courageous character, sure in his faith, unfaltering in his devotion, not alone to the big duties that come along the pathway of honor, but the simple, everyday duties imposed upon him by the relations of life. He was a strong, a big, a good, honest man, an honor to his State, an honor to this House, and an honor and a credit to his great country that he so admirably served.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, the busiest and most joyful days of my service here have been spent in companionship with LEMUEL PHILLIP PADGETT, our lamented friend, in honor of whose memory we are assembled to-day. In committee room, on the floor of the House, in frequent travels during times of peace and war, inspecting naval stations and naval activities here and abroad, I learned through an intimate personal association to appreciate his many virtues and his genuine worth.

As a lawyer and as a legislator he had exceptional ability, and coupled with great ability was a golden heart, a generous mind, a knightly soul, which readily won the friendship, the trust, and confidence of all with whom he came in contact. His scrupulous correctness in habits, his devotion to family, his fidelity to friends, his loyalty to convictions, earned for him an unquestioned reputation as an upright, industrious, conscientious, high-minded public servant.

He richly merits the beautiful tributes paid him to-day by his friends and colleagues, and in the short time remaining there are just two phases of his life that I wish to lay special emphasis on: First, as a legislator in his relation to the Navy; and second, his beautiful conception of life.

For more than 15 years he was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, and for eight years of that time occupied the important position of chairman of that committee; and I think it is well within the facts to say that he wrote or materially aided in writing more original, permanent legislation, and redrafted more old legislation in a helpful way for the Navy than any other man, living or dead. He was chairman of the committee, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has said, during the World War and for several years prior thereto. He wrote the 1916 building program, which had it been completed—and it was nearing completion—would have given to us the greatest Navy of all time. He saw the Navy grow from a personnel of 50,000 to more than 400,000 during the World War, and drafted the legislation which enabled the Navy to successfully meet the exigencies of that great struggle. To have been chairman of this committee during such a crucial period involved immense responsibility, yet he met every demand with signal ability.

No one ever manifested keener pride in the Navy nor knew better its inspiring history and traditions. He never missed an opportunity to speak in praise of its officers and enlisted personnel, and often on the floor of the House, when some one without accurate knowledge drifted into careless speech which was even susceptible of a construction reflecting on the Navy, he was ever ready and prompt to correct such erroneous impressions and to pay what those who heard him quickly recognized was a true and just tribute to the Navy and its personnel.

He had a thorough and accurate knowledge of all laws relating to the Navy, and naval officers frequently expressed wonder at the extent, fullness, and accuracy of his knowledge. He knew its ships, its personnel legislation, and the history of such legislation in its minutest details. Often when the House seemed confused or in doubt as to matters pertaining to naval legislation, a few words from him, spoken without a moment's reflection, readily cleared away all doubts and uncertainties. Truly can it be said that when LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT fell asleep the country lost a friend of rich knowledge and of inspiring leadership in all matters relating to the Navy, our Nation's first and best defense.

This morning a letter was handed me from a distinguished naval officer, one loved in and out of the service, and it gives me pleasure to ask permission to read it on this occasion and insert it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I know the warm esteem in which this officer was held by our lamented friend, and if he could but hear the reading of the letter this morning he would be deeply touched by this sincere yet simple tribute from the men of the Navy, so well expressed by Admiral Washington—the present head of the important Bureau of Navigation. Mr. Speaker, I now ask permission to read the letter as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. OLIVER. The letter is as follows:

MY DEAR MR. OLIVER: I have been informed that to-morrow there will be held at the Capitol a memorial service in honor of the late Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT, of Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT'S long career in the Congress brought him in close and intimate touch with the Navy and its officers and men. We found him always a loyal friend and supporter, a wise mentor and guide, and, above all, a true statesman devoted to his country's interests.

We, in the Bureau of Navigation, who have to do with the personnel of the Navy, always felt free to go to Mr. PADGETT with our problems and difficulties. His thorough grasp of all the details of naval organization and administration, the great esteem and confidence he inspired in his colleagues in the Congress, and his complete knowledge of legislative procedure and practice rendered his advice and counsel of very great value and has materially contributed to the successful administration of the Navy during the past 20 years.

I would be very grateful if you would convey to Mr. PADGETT'S associates and friends in the Congress how deeply and sincerely all the officers and men of the United States Navy mourn our great mutual loss. Our consolation is that the force of his admirable character and attainments will provide us all with a source of inspiration and guidance for many years to come.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS WASHINGTON.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say there was something else in Mr. PADGETT'S life far greater than his distinguished service as a Member of this body, far greater than his success in dealing with the economic and political problems of life, and it constituted the real source of his success and power. No one ever had a more beautiful and perfect conception of life, nor a deeper and more abiding Christian faith in the life hereafter than he had. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] read a few moments ago an excerpt from an impromptu address which Mr. PADGETT delivered last year at the funeral of his warm personal friend, Mr. Browning, of New Jersey. I was present on that occasion, and recall another part of that remarkable address. With wonderful tenderness, yet intense feeling, he spoke these comforting words to the loved ones of his departed friend. I give his exact words:

Living is full of opportunity and life opens a great vista of opportunities and great visions of what may be the grandeur and the glory of living, boundless opportunities, and limitless time and limitless space for development and for growth and for association. Yet with all of our years here there is to us a sense of a lack of satisfaction. The very incompleteness of our purposes, the very lack of opportunity to fully mature and develop our plans, carries with it the lack of satisfaction. And upon an occasion like this we ask ourselves where is the remedy, and will there be a full satisfaction? It is to the loved ones, it is to the bereaved ones, upon an occasion like this that we can say, as we believe, we shall be satisfied when we awake in His likeness.

My friends, I do not wish to speak of the darkness, but of the light; not of the night, but of the day; not of the sunset, but of the sunrise. We see before us these flowers. Beautiful they are, and fragrant; but they soon will wilt and wither, and their fragrance will be lost in the air. We want something at this time more lasting and more substantial and the thought comes to us of the occasion when in other days in the early morning of the first day of the week the women went to the open grave looking for a loved one, and the angel said to them: "He is not here. He is risen"—risen not into the beauty of these flowers, for they soon wilt and fade; not into the beauty of the golden-tinted sunset of the west, for the shadow of night will blot it out; but risen in the life, into the fullness and sweetness of that life where opportunity for greater and better things will be as immeasurable and as illimitable as the universe of God, and whose duration will be commensurate with the eternity of God.

Oh, my friends, the comfort is on an occasion like this, the life—the fullness, the sweetness, the beauty of the life of which the grave is only the portal, or the open door of the transition.

How appropriately can these same words, so recently spoken at the grave of a friend by him whose memory we honor to-day, be now spoken to his own loved ones. They truly portray, yea forever picture the innermost thoughts, the spirit, the soul of our friend who fell asleep on the 2d day of August, 1922, only to awake in another and better home "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Let us ever remember that a mind and heart, spiritually controlled and directed, guided his conduct always, thus insuring ideals that could not be depraved, hopes that could not be lowered, aspirations that could not be corrupted, and the devotion of his great intellect to forces which make for happiness, yea for the glory of the soul.

Truly can it be said of him that—

He transmuted knowledge into wisdom, strength into efficiency, power into service—

And that henceforth he will be—

Forever an influence,
A memory, a goal, a high example,
A thought of honor in some noble heart,
Part of his country's treasure and renown
Oft giving courage to souls that toil.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I have not anything prepared, but I want to add a few words to those that have been said in praise of the character and life of our friend, Mr. PADGETT. I served on the Committee on Naval Affairs with him for the past three years. My first observation upon being inducted into the service of the Committee on Naval Affairs, was the great ability of Mr. PADGETT on all questions pertaining to the Navy. He knew every little detail. I noticed that he knew almost the name of every officer, whether he was great or small, all the legislative business that had been done in the last fifteen or twenty years, so I say that my service with him on the Committee on Naval Affairs has been one of great satisfaction. My knowledge of him as a man, my association with him taught me to love him as one of our great American characters. His life was simple yet useful and loving in every particular. But I perhaps noted more that part of his life which pertained to his domestic affairs. I knew of his lovely disposition and of his lovely nature. I knew the affection in which he was held by the members of his family. I knew of all the consideration that he gave not only to his family but to the members of the Naval Affairs Committee. If there is anything that I can say to add to the many beautiful words that have been spoken I would be glad to add them, but as a friend, a colleague, I desire to be recorded here as saying he was one of our greatest American citizens and has given to our country the great ability that he had acquired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my affection and respect for the person and character of our deceased friend and colleague, Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT, will not permit me to indulge in mere words of praise. He was my friend and comrade for many years. I knew and loved him for his charming personality, his high character, and his eminent abilities.

I first knew him as one of the leading members of the bar in the prosperous and beautiful little city of Columbia, Tenn., where he was born and where he lived throughout his life. He was elected a member of the State senate and served during the term of 1899. I was a member of the lower house of that legislature and am familiar with his record as State senator. He immediately took rank as one of the ablest and leading men of that body. His service was so faithful and satisfactory and his integrity of purpose and devotion to duty so well known that in 1900 he was nominated and elected to Congress over a number of able candidates. He took his seat in this body March 4, 1901, and served continuously from that time until his death on August 2, 1922.

He was made a member of the important Committee on Naval Affairs and, with his characteristic thoroughness, soon came to be a recognized authority in Congress on naval matters.

It is no exaggeration to say that there was no man in either branch of Congress who had such an intimate and complete knowledge of our Navy. He became Chairman of the Committee when the Democrats came in control of the House in 1911, and served as such throughout the eight years of Democratic control He was earnestly opposed to war for offensive purposes, but he was thoroughly imbued with the importance and necessity of an adequate Navy for defense, and it was under his wise guidance that legislation was enacted which resulted in making our Navy the second largest and most powerful in the world, the wisdom of which was apparent to every one when our country was drawn into the greatest conflict of all the ages. The presence to-day of so many distinguished admirals and high officials of the Navy, who sit in the gallery, is a magnificent tribute and testimonial of their very great respect and regard for Mr. PADGETT as a man and a legislator, and of the splendid services which he rendered to his country.

While he specialized on naval matters, his public service was by no means confined to that one line of endeavor. He was an important factor and counselor in the shaping of much important legislation while his party was in control, and an influential force throughout his legislative career. He never neglected the smaller and more unimportant duties of a Congressman. He was energetic and faithful, anxious always to serve to the fullest extent every man and women in his district without regard to their station in life. No man ever represented a greater or more intelligent constituency, and they showed their appreciation of his fidelity and ability by keeping him in Congress until his death.

His home life was ideal. More than 40 years ago he married a charming young lady of his native city, who survives him. Their devotion to each other was tender and beautiful. He loved her and their children with all the devotion of which his great heart was capable. He was a devoted, tender, and affectionate husband and a gentle and loving father. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, he was a kindly, Christian gentleman. He practiced what he preached. Of him it could be said in truth:

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mixed in him that Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

During his last illness it was my privilege to visit him often at his home in this city. When he was first stricken and for weeks thereafter no one suspected that he would not recover. As the disease progressed, he asked me one day to bring pen and paper and write a codicil to his last will and testament, disposing of property he had acquired since his original will was made. And then, with his usual thoughtfulness and as if to dispel any fear that might be felt by his family and friends, he gently said, "I do not mean by this to indicate that I feel that I am going to die, for none of us know, but I believe that everyone should put his house in order and be ready to answer the last call whenever it comes." And as I sat by his bedside penning the provisions of the codicil which he calmly and clearly announced, I felt that he realized that his earthly career was soon to come to an end; but there was no murmur, no complaint on his part. There was no sign of either regret or fear. He was ready; his house was in order. And as I bade him good-by and left his sick chamber with tears in my eyes I too realized somehow that he was soon to be called to his heavenly home.

I went to my home in Tennessee and in a few short weeks the news came that the gentle spirit of LEMUEL P. PADGETT had taken its flight. He died peacefully, for throughout his life he had followed the injunction to—

So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

His remains were carried back to Tennessee and the home he loved so well. A great concourse of friends and constituents from all over his district assembled to do him honor and pay a last tribute of affection to his memory. All that was mortal of him was laid away by tender and loving hands, under the flowers in beautiful Rose Hill Cemetery in Columbia, and beside the remains of a lately deceased and beloved son, there to rest until resurrection morn, when he will be called to joint those who have been faithful, honest, and true in this life. We will see him again, Mr. Speaker, for we are taught to believe and to know that there is a hereafter where friends who have been true and upright while on earth will meet, never to part again. So we say to this splendid American, loyal citizen, faithful friend, devoted husband, affectionate father, and knightly, Christian gentleman, "Hail and farewell until we meet again."

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, a good man, who for a score of years rendered distinguished services to our country in these Halls, has paid the debt of nature and gone to his final account. We, his colleagues, have assembled here to-day to pay tribute to his memory and I count it a privilege to add my word of praise. Shortly after I came to Washington as a Member of the Sixty-fourth Congress it was my good fortune to make the acquaintance of LEMUEL P. PADGETT, who was then chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. At the opening of the Sixty-fifth Congress I became a member of that committee and served upon it with Mr. PADGETT until his death in August, 1922. During this period the United States entered the World War and our committee was called upon to consider and report legislation of the greatest importance not only to this country but to our allies and to the cause of liberty and humanity. Mr. PADGETT was at all times equal to the great trust and the tremendous responsibilities which were in his keeping. His knowledge of naval legislation and the problems which arose because of our participation in the war was profound; his grasp of the numerous details was amazing. He recognized the need of action rather than words, and many of the great war measures reported by the committee were put through the House in record time.

Under his leadership the committee disregarded partisanship and made prompt response to every appeal from the administration for legislation necessary to the winning of the war. When the fortunes of politics relegated Mr. PADGETT to the position of ranking minority member, his interest in the Navy did not abate. He applied himself whole-heartedly to the new naval problems—the problems of reconstruction. His entire services on the committee were characterized by industry, good judgment, and a high degree of patriotism. It is only fair to say that no Member of Congress in a score of years rendered more valuable services to the country in connection with naval legislation than did Mr. PADGETT. No man stood higher in the esteem and confidence of his colleagues, both on the committee and in the House.

Mr. PADGETT was a man of the highest character, a gentleman in every sense of the word, a scholar of great learning, and a patriot who loved his country and its institutions. A worthy son of a great State which has contributed more than her share to the list of great Americans, he made himself a place in the highest councils of the Nation.

Those of us who were privileged to know Mr. PADGETT intimately were impressed with the quiet dignity of his bearing, with his uniform courtesy, with his absolute candor and fairness, with his loyalty to his friends, with his supreme love of country, with the religion which he daily practiced. He walked uprightly before God and man. In his passing the State of Tennessee has lost one of her foremost sons and the Nation an able and distinguished legislator.

I join with you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in paying tribute to his memory.

May the monument which marks his last resting place be of spotless marble, for it can not be purer or whiter than his life.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I have not been accustomed to speaking on occasions of this character, but by reason of my peculiar admiration for LEMUEL P. PADGETT, late a Member of this body, I would feel remiss in the discharge of my duty should I fail to join his colleagues who assemble to-day to pay honor to his memory.

It was my pleasure to form an intimate acquaintance with Mr. PADGETT soon after I became a Member of the House. Our acquaintance soon developed into a strong personal friendship, which continued to grow during our service together of more than 11 years, and by reason of the close personal relationship between us I watched his legislative career closely and with much interest.

As chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs while his party was in control of the organization of the House he proved himself to be the master of every subject relating to the Naval Establishment, and, in my opinion, showed a stronger combination of knowledge of his subjects and tact in handling them through legislative procedure than any other individual that I have known during my service. He was always fully informed on his subject, from the broadest questions of governmental policy to the most delicate and minute details. His kind yet firm and straightforward manner in dealing with his fellow Members while in charge of bills from his committee won for him both their admiration and their confidence. So strongly was he intrenched in the admiration and the confidence of his fellow Members that he seldom, if ever, failed to carry to final enactment bills sponsored by him on the floor of the House. His long, uninterrupted service in the House attests the fact that he was also intrenched in the admiration and confidence of the people of the district from which he came.

His personal manner was charming, always pleasant, always kindly disposed, never given to excesses in habit or in speech. Never did I during my entire association with him hear him utter a word that would be improper to utter in the presence of ladies. Both his manner and his speech were an inspiration to those who came in contact with him. In his passing the country lost a noble citizen, the House an honored and useful Member. Let it be said and truly said that the race has profited by his existence and the House and the country have profited by his valuable service here. He is gone, but his record of achievement will live on through the years so long as the history of the American Congress lasts.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed with the most profound feeling of sadness that I contribute a few remarks on this somber and melancholy occasion whereon we have met to memoralize the life, character, and public service of our late, lamented colleague, Hon. LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT, who, after a career abounding in achievement, has passed to that great beyond "from whose bourne no traveler ever returns." I first met our departed colleague in 1914, during the State campaign of that year, and while he was conspicuous throughout that memorable campaign, which was one of the bitterest and most acrimonious in the history of the politics of the Volunteer State, he always maintained that generous and cordial composure so characteristic of himself. And while the political atmosphere about him was charged with the most intense venom and hate, and while all sorts of maledictions and animadversions were being hurled here and there, it was a notable fact that LEMUEL P. PADGETT never permitted abuse, billingsgate, or recrimination to profane his lips.

Mr. Speaker, I learned to respect our departed colleague then and my associations with him here during the Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth Congresses simply served to increase and solidify my respect and admiration for his manly qualities.

In the death of LEMUEL P. PADGETT the House of Representatives, his constituency, the State of Tennessee, and the Nation at large have sustained a distinct and irreparable loss. During his career here he displayed an industry, an activity, and a relish and capacity for work seldom exercised in legislative service, and as a result thereof his name will be forever associated with some of the most wholesome and constructive legislation that has been enacted during this generation. Few men had a larger and more exhaustive fund of legislative knowledge, or were more exact, accurate, and thorough in dealing with legislative problems than he.

He was recognized by his colleagues and by the whole country as an authority on questions affecting the financial condition of the Nation, and he was particularly learned and skilled in naval affairs, occupying for many years a conspicuous place on the great Naval Affairs Committee of the House. He was a practical man, and in his work as a legislator and statesman he never allowed the mists and fogs of theory and speculation to hamper or obfuscate his practical vision. He could always assign a reason for "the faith that was within him," taking the position that a proposition that could not be demonstrated by facts and figures and by the ordinary laws and processes of logic was unworthy of consideration. Likewise, he had no patience with sham nor hypocrisy. He never engaged in demagoguery himself, and I personally know that the practice thereof by others was exceedingly loathsome to him.

He was strong in debate but his strength in this respect did not consist in the employment of metaphor or glittering generalities, but rather in the use of logic and cold fact. He was indispensable in committee work because he was indefatigable in research and investigation—things that are irksome and onerous to the average member, but nevertheless a work that is absolutely necessary to a "safe and sane" consideration of legislation. By some this work is considered drudgery, and if drudgery means hard work it is drudgery, and therefore the man who has the will and the patience to do it is entitled to be called a patriot.

In its final analysis, LEMUEL P. PADGETT was a simple, unsophisticated, practical man. Simple in his tastes, unpretentious in his dress and manner, and practical in his activities, official and otherwise. To his everlasting credit be it said that he was patriotic to a preeminent degree. That old familiar slogan, "My country, may she ever be right, but right or wrong, my country," perfectly typified the spirit of our deceased colleague. Loyal to his country and to his friends, he was a genuine American citizen of the old school.

Measured by any criterion, LEMUEL P. PADGETT was distinguished. He had a quiet, unassuming dignity that frowned not upon comradeship nor cordiality. He was able, yet tolerant; zealous but just—honorable to a fault—"and the elements of greatness so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world—this was a man."

Mr. Speaker, knowing our beloved colleague as I did, when I heard of his death, I was unconciously reminded of that passage in Second Samuel:

"Know ye not that a prince and a great man has this day fallen in Israel."

The propositions that "to err is human" and that "we all make mistakes" are well known and well recognized for their verity, but in my opinion very few of us have committed as few errors and made as few mistakes as he in whose memory we are assembled to-day.

As we contemplate the hereafter, Mr. Speaker, what richer heritage can any one leave to his country, to his family, or to posterity than a record devoted to faithful, unselfish, and patriotic endeavors whether in public or private life? What greater consolation can come to anyone about to depart for the great unknown than to realize that he has contributed something to the happiness and welfare of mankind?

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT has gone! His work here is finished. His enfranchised spirit has departed hence to join in sweet and perfect harmony and comradeship that innumerable host of immortals who wrought faithful and well here, and who are enjoying their just deserts on the other shore.

Peace to his ashes! honor to his name! and immortality to his memory!

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we have met to-day to pay a tribute to the memory of one whom all of us loved and honored. When we heard that our colleague L. P. PADGETT, of Tennessee, had crossed the river, we grieved that he had gone, but we gloried that he had left a record of service which was both an example and an inspiration. It has been said,

> Man is of soul and body, formed for deeds
> Of high resolve.

This was true of our lamented colleague, and well was his work done. Others will speak in detail of his service here. Briefly I will speak of him as I knew him.

Among the most cherished recollections of my service here will be the acquaintance early formed with this valiant son of Tennessee. Soon after I came here I met him. Though he was a legislator of long experience, high in the counsels of the party, burdened with the responsibilities of most important work at a crucial period in our Nation's life, yet he found time to welcome a raw recruit, to offer to him words of encouragement, and to help him in his work. Mr. PADGETT inspired confidence. He had the confidence of his colleagues to a degree which I have seldom seen given to others.

Members on both sides of the aisle knew that statements made by him as facts needed no verification, that he spoke only what he knew, and that always he spoke the truth without equivocation of any kind. When Mr. PADGETT spoke as of his knowledge no one doubted. So it was that his influence grew daily, and reached not only his colleagues here but all branches of official life. This was manifested in marked degree in one of the last fights of his legislative life, when he successfully resisted a reduction in the Navy personnel, and carried with him many who had no opportunity to study exhaustively the subject, but who expressed themselves as satisfied to follow where the distinguished son of Tennessee might lead. Freely he was consulted by Members of all parties, frankly he counseled, and wisely he led.

He was a man wholly free from the ostentatious. There was nothing affected about him. He was patient at all times, and one of the kindliest, tenderest, and most generous of men. Never obtruding himself, yet he was ever prompt to take up the cudgels when duty demanded. While I served with him he never consumed unnecessarily the time of the House. When he spoke, it was proper and meet for him to speak. Then he presented his facts in masterly array, and disarmed his antagonist by his superior knowledge of the subject on which he spoke.

There was none of hero worship nor of cant in his make-up. He knew men as they were. He overlooked their weaknesses and he readily cultivated their virtues.

Mr. PADGETT'S candor, his experience, his fidelity, and, above all, his truth, were predominant characteristics. Lord Bacon said:

> But no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage-ground of truth.

It was upon this vantage ground our colleague stood. There he lived, fought his battles, and won his victories. Possible partisan advantage could never tempt him. And so he won the esteem of those to whom he was politically opposed and of those with whom he was affiliated.

Confidence and esteem merged into love. His people loved him. This House loved him. His presence here was ever a pleasure, and his departure left our hearts heavy. Heads were bowed, and eyes were moistened.

In the chronicles of this body will be found Mr. PADGETT'S best memorial. The record is one of useful work. He builded well, and when the glorious record of the United States Navy in the World War shall have been written, the work of Mr. PADGETT at the head of the great Committee on Naval Affairs in this House will appear on every page. He was ever the Navy's friend, and America's proud place on the seas was in part his work. Those who labored with him in those trying times can best tell the story of those hours and his achievements. He spared not himself, and the Navy honored him living, and reveres him dead.

Mr. PADGETT was a patriot. He was ready at all times to give the best that was in him to his country's preservation and prosperity. He prated not in loud and lengthy phrase, but in the simple language of love and in unfaltering service he showed his loyalty and his zeal. No more devoted patriot has ever sat in these halls.

Wise counselor and devoted public servant, farewell. For thee life's labors have ended, and thou hast reaped the reward of the faithful and the just. Thou hast left us an example. Thy life will ever serve as an inspiration.

Beloved friend, farewell.

Farewell! A word that must be, and hath been—
A sound which makes us linger, yet—farewell.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to have made the acquaintance of LEMUEL P. PADGETT, a Representative in Congress from Tennessee, who at that time was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House, when I first entered upon my service here; he and I were domiciled at the same hotel that session. Thus I early was fortunate in making his acquaintance. That acquaintance began in December, 1915, and continued until the day of his death, and as each day passed my admiration and my affection for him increased. My speech would be complete with one sentence, after sitting here and listening to the absolute candid and truthful tributes to Mr. PADGETT, of his work and his fidelity to his country and his people, and saying they are true, is saying more than any words that I could utter. But I can not refrain, however, from relating that I early detected in him the characteristics that we enjoy and respect in man—honesty of purpose, generous in his treatment of his fellow man, candid in his conclusions, comprehensive in his research upon matters that he entered upon. As he served his district in Tennessee and in this House and the entire country, his record of service speaks volumes more eloquent than lips or tongue of man could attempt to describe them. His guiding mind and judgment while he was chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, if studied, would show conclusively his ability to detect the needs of his country, the details of any weakness, if such existed in the Navy. It would also show that wherever a weakness was discovered by him that was detrimental to his country's defense, even in time of peace, he well knew what was necessary to be done to correct the infirmity and place the Navy in readiness for an emergency, if an emergency came.

So, when called upon in 1917 to act as a Member of this House, his previous study and experience had fitted him for those important duties so that he could discharge those duties with the ease of a student who has mastered his subject and is ready for examination by his professor. He had mastered the details, as has been said, of the needs of the Navy as a part of our national defense. He knew all about them in almost every detail, and his colleagues soon realized that when he stood on the floor of this House and made a statement relative thereto, it was just in accordance with the facts, and his advice, as stated by my distinguished colleague, Mr. MADDEN, was followed with honesty and candor by many of the Members of the House; indeed by most of the membership of the House, because we all had faith in him and respected his judgment; we all recognized his honesty of purpose, and were willing to follow where he led.

So his work in this department of the Government and in his service to his country and in other departments as a Member of this House and a citizen of this country finally came to an end; but, my colleagues, the achievements of his life, his accomplishments in this House, and his work as a noble citizen from the State of Tennessee, and his influence upon those of us who remain will stay with us as long as we remain, and when we pass it will pass on down through the ages and be influential and helpful to posterity. In his nature and treatment of others he was kind and gentle, yet firm. He was as considerate as the Good Book teaches us all to be. His daily life was an example of Christian fortitude, of uprightness, of candor, of fervency, and of love of his fellow man.

Somebody has said that he was a partisan. He was, and so are all of us. Possibly I differed with him politically, but the very fact that he was a partisan and that I on general principles differed from him politically soon led me to honor him for his partisanship, and the fact that he was a partisan led me to admire and respect him in the highest degree.

As a new Member here, no Member of the House, not even my own colleague from my own State, whom I had known from boyhood, treated me more kindly and with more considerate courtesy than did our distinguished friend from Tennessee who occupied a seat in this House until recently; and it will be a source of comfort to me as the years roll by that LEMUEL P. PADGETT, a Member of this House, a Democrat, was my friend, and that I had unbounded love and respect for him as a man, as a partisan, as a legislator, as a patriot, and as a loyal supporter of the United States Government, its flag, and its traditions. His influence and example was for right, which must result in lasting benefit and perpetuation of country, its people, and our institutions.

He did his duty in every position in which he was placed. Let us this day remember we must live so that the world will be better for our having contributed something to help mankind, and when we are gone our friends can truthfully say—

A good man has passed to his reward.

I sincerely feel that I can truthfully say that when LEMUEL P. PADGETT died a good man passed to his reward.

He never forgot to observe in his daily life the teachings described in the following lines:

We live in deeds, not years, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, we have assembled here to-day not so much to mourn as to express our reflections upon a high, knightly life, nobly spent. And we do so in order that those reflections may reach not only those who knew LEMUEL P. PADGETT, but the people who, from one end of the land to the other, will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and be inspired by our expressions to emulate the great American who knew no greatness but his country's good. No nobler soul ever dwelled upon this earth than the dead statesman. No choicer spirit ever graced a land than the dead jurist—

Let all the ends thou aimest at be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's;
Be noble; and the nobleness that lies
In other men sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own—

were as a cloud by day and a pillar by night to the one in whose memory we are to-day holding these exercises. They were his song early and late, by day and by night. He loved his country, and did not deem it necessary to give a reason why. It was his own—that was sufficient. The moral grandeur of his great nature sanctified his patriotism, and to his luminous, large, and comprehending eye the ideals, aspirations, hopes, and purposes of his land were not only just, but holy, as they were from his viewpoint preliminary to the ends the Creator has in mind, and to which LEMUEL PADGETT reverently and solemnly looked, as the millenium, when the lion and the lamb shall lie down, and there shall be peace on earth to men of good will.

Mr. Speaker, I knew Mr. PADGETT for three years. During one of those years I knew him almost intimately; for during that time I spent many days in conversation with him in reference to affairs that came before the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was during those days that I learned the full value of a magnificent inscription that is engraved on a slab in a cemetery in the city of New Orleans, and is now written on the hearts of men and women of that famous old town. They are in memoriam of one who played out a great part in the section of the country from which I come. The lines are stately, reverent, patriotic, eloquent, and inspiring. They are a worthy tribute to our departed friend. I can not quote them literally, but substantially they are:

A man tried in many high offices;
And critical enterprises;
And found faithful in all;
His life was one long sacrifice of interest to conscience and unswerving duty of devotion to country;
His greatness stands confessed to-day in a people's tears;
Resolute, moderate, clear of envy, yet not wanting in that finer ambition which makes men great and pure;
In his honor—impregnable;
In his simplicity—sublime;
No country e'er had a truer son—no cause a nobler champion;
No people a bolder defender—no principle a purer advocate, than the dead statesman who sleeps his last sleep in the soil of his well-beloved Commonwealth of Tennessee;
His fame, consigned to the keeping of that time which, happily, is not so much the tomb of virtue as its shrine;
Shall, in the years to come, fire modest worth to noble ends.
In honor, now the great statesman rests;
A bereaved people mourn him;
A proud Commonwealth and a noble Nation claim him;
And history shall cherish him;
Among those choicer spirits, who, holding their conscience unmixed with blame;

Have been, in all conjunctures, true to themselves, their people, and their God.

LEMUEL P. PADGETT expressed all that is great and good and splendid and noble in the life of America. He did noble things, not dreamed them all day long, and so contributed by his presence in this body to its upbuilding and by his ability, an American on the floor of this Congress, to the greatness and glory and grandeur of this country.

Years ago, down on the floor of the Louisiana Legislature of which I had the good fortune to be a member, I heard a distinguished Louisianian, one who wrote "The Unwritten Law," which excited the comment of lawyers from ocean to ocean, a man who had played out a great and gallant and splendid part in the affairs of Louisiana during its trying days—and those days were many—declare facetiously and somewhat banteringly, and yet half seriously, that speeches usually won the applause of legislators but never their votes, and that a man who was convinced against his will was of the same opinion still. That, in a large measure, is true, however cynical its utterance may be regarded. I have heard splendid addresses delivered on the floor of this House. I have heard some great speeches made almost extemporaneously, clear-cut, logical, and powerful; for the reason that the speakers were the possessors of the peculiar knowledge that enabled them to present the facts succinctly and clearly; but those speeches were not moving for they were lacking in the fire, that afflatus, that blazing fervor that characterized two memorable addresses delivered on the floor of this House by LEMUEL P. PADGETT in behalf of the Navy that he loved so well.

That never-to-be-forgotten occasion was last year, when the amendment was before the House increasing the number of the naval personnel above that which had been fixed by the committee. Mr. PADGETT rose to Olympian heights and delivered what, in my judgment, was one of the finest addresses that I ever listened to; not fine, probably, in high-sounding platitudinous sentences, not remarkable as abounding in polysyllabic words, but great for the reason that it possessed the fire and the fervor, which fanned the dormant love of Navy into a white heat, and made us willing to shout out: Long live the Navy! The faith that was in him he was able to communicate to the House, and he swept the majority of the Members before that eloquence just as a prairie gives way before a fire that sweeps over it. It was a thrilling address, and for the first time in my life I realized the full significance and meaning of the words—

> If you would have me weep, begin the strain,
> That I may feel your sorrow, feel your pain.

And then came a slight reaction, after a while, for after a raging and furious parliamentary struggle it looked to some of the most anxious of us as if some of the forces that were militantly for the amendment were beginning to yield to what was either good argument or to the powerful and sentimental appeals that were made to set a good example to the world by a dangerous spirit of self-abnegation on our part. It was at what we thought was a critical moment that we felt it necessary to urge Mr. PADGETT to take the floor again. Very reluctantly he consented, because he was an extremely modest man. He yielded only after we made it clear to him (we who favored the amendment) that he was the only man who possessed at that moment the driving force, which influences men, and as I said before seldom does influence them here because convictions are almost arrived at long before the vote is taken on any proposition. It was then, in the second address, that he brought home in his own way, but in superforensic appeal, the appalling danger that would confront this country on some tremendous day if we had to meet a superior force upon the sea; and his graphic, picturesque, wonderful way of communicating the despair that would seize upon our hearts if we ever learned that our fleet had gone to the bottom of the ocean as a result of our unwillingness to meet the great and growing need for its proper maintenance thrilled us, set our hearts ablaze, and at once made clear and certain to a majority that the amendment would carry. Yes, it was a great speech, and I am glad I had the privilege of listening to it.

Mr. Speaker, I never could commit to memory words that I myself might put upon paper for such occasions. I have always felt that I ought to depend upon the inspiration of the moment and the sentiments that would be born within me as the result of the addresses by my colleagues, my own reminiscences and recollections of the departed, for a suitable expression of that which was throbbing in my heart, which I can not all express yet can not all conceal. But there are some lines written by others which we sometimes are able to sing probably as well as those who wrote the original song. There are some lines that are always appropriate to such occasions as this. Wonderfully philosophical, they inspire one to dream and to think not only of the manly part we should play upon this earth, which LEMUEL PADGETT played out in the grand drama of life, but they inspire us to look beyond and to contemplate our journey into that new land of adventure, into that higher sphere of action bravely, as the gallant souls of America would have us to go. I am going to try to recite those lines and with that recitation close this feeble tribute to the memory of one of America's greatest, most chivalrous, and most gallant souls. That vision of death would have immortalized William Cullen Bryant and added to the literature of the English-speaking people if he had never written anything else, though his other poems place his name high in the niches of America:

> To him who in the love of Nature holds
> Communion with her visible forms, she speaks
> A various language; for his gayer hours
> She has a voice of gladness, and a smile
> And eloquence of beauty, and she glides
> Into his darker musings, with a mild
> And healing sympathy, that steals away
> Their sharpness ere he is aware. When thoughts
> Of the last bitter hour come like a blight
> Over thy spirit, and sad images
> Of the stern agony, and shroud, and pall,
> And breathless darkness, and the narrow house,
> Make thee to shudder, and grow sick at heart;—
> Go forth, under the open sky, and list
> To Nature's teachings, while from all around—
> Earth and her waters, and the depths of air—
> Comes a still voice—Yet a few days, and thee,
> The all-beholding sun, shall see no more
> In all his course; nor yet in the cold ground,
> Where thy pale form was laid, with many tears,
> Nor in the embrace of ocean, shall exist
> Thy image. Earth, that nourished thee, shall claim
> Thy growth, to be resolved to earth again,
> And, lost each human trace, surrendering up.
> Thine individual being, shalt thou go
> To mix forever with the elements,
> To be a brother to the insensible rock
> And to the sluggish clod, which the rude swain
> Turns with his share and treads upon. The oak > Shall send his roots abroad, and pierce thy mould.
> Yet not to thine eternal resting place
> Shalt thou retire alone, nor could thou wish
> Couch more magnificent. Thou shalt lie down
> With patriarchs of the infant world—with kings,
> The powerful of the earth—the wise, the good,
> Fair forms, and hoary seers of ages past,
> All in one mighty sepulcher. The hills,
> Rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun—the vales,
> Stretching in pensive quietness between;
> The venerable woods—rivers that move
> In majesty, and the complaining brooks
> That make the meadows green; and, poured round all,
> Old ocean's gray and melancholy waste—
> Are but the solemn decorations all
> Of the great tomb of man. The golden sun,
> The planets, all the infinite host of heaven,
> Are shining on the sad abodes of death
> Through the still lapse of ages. All that tread
> The globe are but a handful to the tribes
> That slumber in its bosom. Take the wings
> Of morning, pierce the Barcan wilderness,
> Or lose thyself in the continuous woods
> Where rolls the Oregon and hears no sound
> Save his own dashings—yet the dead are there;
> And millions in those solitudes, since first
> The flight of years began, have laid them down
> In their last sleep—the dead reign there alone.
> So shalt thou rest, and what if thou withdraw
> In silence from the living, and no friend
> Take note of thy departure? All that breathe
> Will share thy destiny. The gay will laugh
> When thou art gone, the solemn brood of care
> Plod on, and each one as before will chase
> His favorite phantom; yet all these shall leave
> Their mirth and their employments, and shall come
> And make their bed with thee. As the long train
> Of ages glide away, the sons of men,
> The youth in life's fresh spring, and he who goes
> In the full strength of years, matron, and maid,
> The speechless babe, and the gray-headed man—
> Shall one by one be gathered to thy side,
> By those, who in their turn shall follow them.
> So live that when thy summons comes to join
> The innumerable caravan which moves
> To that mysterious realm where each shall take
> His chamber in the silent halls of death,
> Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
> Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
> By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
> Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, of most men, the highest compliment we can speak is to say that we greatly admire and respect them. It is given to but few men to arouse in other men sentiments of real endearment. And yet what has been said here this afternoon proves that LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT was such a man. I knew him well and I am proud to say that I loved him. I met him first under the sunny skies of California early in 1917. At that time his mind was weighted down with the grave responsibility of planning adequate defense for this country in the face of a fast approaching crisis. The acquaintance then begun ripened into closer friendship in the succeeding years. I have seen him under many varied circumstances and conditions. I worked with him in committee and on the floor of this House. I have spent time with him in hours of recreation. I have been received by him into the quietude of his home, and again have seen him meeting officialdom in the glare and under the pomp of formal society. Everywhere and all the time he was the same sincere, quiet, dignified and kindly man. I can pay him no higher tribute than to say that in every sense of the word he was a true Southern gentleman.

Coming to this House from an inland State, the casual observer of the usual course of political events would have counseled him in the interest of political success to have devoted his time and effort to matters of local interest in his district instead of giving the best years of his life to the study of national problems. Yet such was the character of the man that when he conceived a certain course to be the high road of duty he pursued it without regard to what the personal consequences might be to him. So, finding himself placed upon the Committee on Naval Affairs he devoted himself, his time, and his talents unreservedly to the mastering of that subject until he was recognized as one of the leading, if not the leading, authority upon the subject in this House. It may be that the ordinary constituency would not have supported its Representative in such an unselfish course, but I have had the honor and the privilege of meeting the people of the Seventh District of Tennessee and found that there is nowhere a more generous and patriotic constituency.

They are accustomed to give their best men to the service of their country, among them a President of the United States. And so, loyal to high principle and in devotion to their country, they returned LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT time and time again, and in my opinion if he had not died they would have returned him over and over as long as he desired to serve here. They, with all of us, can be proud of the fruits of his labor—a Navy second to none in the world.

He was a lover of peace, but he was not satisfied merely to talk about it in terms of generalities. He took action to guarantee peace for this country by building up a Navy which as long as it is maintained on the basis he advocated will insure our shores and land against attack or invasion by any hostile force.

No one can estimate the number of lives his work saved in the late war, but this much we do know: that when time came for us to send over hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of boys to the other side, our Navy—his Navy—was ready and able to convey those boys across the perilous seas, surrounded on every hand by impending danger, without the loss of a single life. Many a mother's heart is duly grateful that her boy was taken over and brought back without disaster upon that ocean voyage. His efforts in behalf of an adequate Navy made this great achievement possible, and as long as that war is remembered LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT will be remembered also.

His glory and the glory of his work belongs not to his district alone, nor to his State or party. It constitutes an accomplishment of a real American statesman, and Americans, wherever they may be, will take a just pride in the contributions he made to the advancement and welfare of our country.

Mr. TURNER took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been associated with Mr. PADGETT for many years, but it so chanced that we were never thrown together on any committee or in any official way, nor did our paths ever cross much socially, so that I never became personally intimate with him. Such intimacy is very much a matter of accident here, for the membership of the House is so large and the committee work is so exclusive that you are very apt to form a close friendship only with those whose line of work, by the lottery of appointments to committees, runs in the same channels as yours. Still, Mr. PADGETT was a man of such prominence that every one in the House would have a clear opinion about him, and he and I were here so many years together that our personal friendship was strong, though not intimate.

What I recently said about another Member of the House, that the best way to gain respect and confidence and leadership here was to show that you are thoroughly informed on the subjects which you discuss, was illustrated by the career of Mr. PADGETT. He was for years a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and in the eyes of the House became identified with that committee. He was its chairman during the World War, when the importance of that committee rose to its climax and when its activity was so great and incessant, and he early convinced the House that he was a master of his subject. He could explain and clarify the most abstruse naval problems. He must have worked indefatigably to achieve such familiarity with his very comprehensive sphere of duty and he won the complete confidence of the House and a position of leadership in his line that was undisputed. And afterwards, when his party had lost control of the House and he was no longer chairman of the committee, he was always listened to with attention and respect, and his opinion always carried weight. He was faithful in his duty, was always courteous and kindly in his bearing, was reasonable and considerate and friendly when in charge of legislation, and I counted him one of the strongest and most influential Members of the House, and felt toward him warm friendship and sincere respect.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a number of gentlemen who are unavoidably absent and could not be present to-day have expressed to me and others of the delegation a desire to have an opportunity of paying their tributes to our late colleague. I therefore ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all Members may have the opportunity of extending their remarks in the RECORD on our deceased colleague. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the general leave to extend their own remarks I desire to ask permission that I may be permitted to extend my remarks by including editorials and utterances from the home paper of our late colleague.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues who have preceded me, many of whom had the privilege of serving with him for a longer period than I, have perhaps touched every phase of the character and service of our distinguished and beloved former colleague whom we are now honoring. However, my admiration and affection for him were such that I desire to add a few thoughts to the beautiful and merited tributes which have already been paid him, and every word of which I fully indorse.

These truthful tributes to his qualities and achievements were made possible by the fact that LEMUEL P. PADGETT was a good man in every sense of the word. He was a man of the very highest integrity, a man of the loftiest ideals, a man of the most exemplary habits. He was a genuine, unfaltering Christian in the truest sense of that word.

As has already been stated, he was devoted to the members of his family and each member of his family was equally devoted to him. If I were required to characterize Mr. PADGETT and his services by one word, I believe that I would employ the word fidelity—fidelity to his own higher self, fidelity to his own household, fidelity to his friends, fidelity to his ideals, fidelity to his country, fidelity to the right, and fidelity to his God.

Ever patient and tolerant, yet he never wavered between right and wrong.

Dignified, deliberate, well poised always, yet Mr. PADGETT possessed and exercised the quiet and determined zeal of a crusader in any cause to which he devoted himself. Kindly, polite, courteous, extremely modest, yet he was a strong man, a man of definite opinions, a man of positive convictions, and with the full courage of those convictions. Reaching his conclusions after careful investigation and mature deliberation, he always felt sure of his ground and acted accordingly.

Together with a few others present I had the privilege of participating in the last sad rites paid to our departed colleague at his home in Columbia, Tenn. The high esteem in which he was held by his own fellow citizens was convincingly manifested by the vast concourse of people who gathered from the uttermost borders of his county and from various other sections of the State to pay a last tribute to his memory. I likewise had the privilege on that occasion of attending memorial exercises held by the members of the bar of Columbia and of Maury County. His former associates at the bar, his lifelong neighbors, expressed their estimate of his character and achievements. They dwelt upon a somewhat different phase than that which has been discussed to-day. They spoke of him as the lawyer, as the neighbor, as the citizen, and I never heard more beautiful, more tender tributes paid to any man than were paid to him on that occasion by different members of his bar.

I had many intimate personal talks with Mr. PADGETT, in which we discussed personal matters, as well as official matters, and each of those interviews served to enhance the exalted opinion, the very great admiration, and the profound respect which I had for this great man. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that LEMUEL P. PADGETT lived a life of great usefulness, and left a rich heritage to his family, to his district, to his State, and to his country.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, Alfred Tennyson, coming to the Laureateship on the death of William Wordsworth, boasted, in a memorable line, that he wore the laurel "greener from the brow of him who uttered nothing base," and so he, who now represents the Seventh District of Tennessee in this Chamber (and those who come after him) may likewise boast that he occupies a seat richer and more honored for that it was once filled by the man whom we praise and mourn to-day.

LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT was for 22 consecutive years a member of this House. His service, always characterized by conspicuous ability, indefatigable industry, and the strictest fidelity to duty, covered a wide range of activity, including membership on the National Monetary Commission and Regency of the Smithsonian Institution—large honors both. But his greatest work was done in behalf of the American Navy, with whose development and achievement his name will be forever indissolubly linked. His was the task, as Chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs during the World War and in the years immediately preceding it, to see to it that the Navy was ready to do its part when called upon. How well he performed that task is shown by the wonderful record which our Navy earned during the great struggle. Nor did that interest lapse with the end of the war, or when he became the ranking minority member of the committee. One of the last great offices that he rendered was when he fought the attempt made less than a year ago by well-meaning, though misguided, men, who sought to reduce the Navy and its personnel to a point that was perilous to national safety and defense.

It is a singular tribute to the broad and patriotic outlook of this brave and conscientious man, and to the intelligence of his constituency and its just confidence in him as its representative, that such ardent belief in and support of the Navy came from a man who was born in the interior, lived constantly in the town of his birth, and represented a district far from the coast line, whose people might well have been excused had they failed to grasp the necessity for and the importance of a strong, well-balanced Navy, not only in time of war but in time of peace. There is but little credit due us who live on and near the sea for our support of such a Navy. In the nature of things, its necessity appeals to us, and we have, in our legislative efforts in behalf of a defensive but fighting fleet, the warmest support of those who put us in office, but here was a man who was born and lived all his life in Columbia, Tenn., far from the possible arena of naval contest, who represented a people whose immediate and actual security was not dependent in any local sense on the Navy, yet who saw with clear vision how important an adjunct to national life the Navy was to the whole country. He discarded all possibility of damaging results to his own political fortunes; he never wavered, and, with the earnestness of his convictions, the completeness of his knowledge of the subject, and the respect which his high personal character inspired, remained to the end, with the approval of his people, a fearless advocate of a strong American Navy. Those who have seen Mr. PADGETT in charge of the great Navy supply bills can never forget the patience, the thoroughness, the tact, yet the frankness and openness, with which he handled these great measures, and, true to his nature, he displayed these same qualities when he was in the political minority.

Mr. PADGETT was one of the first men whom I met when I came to Washington more than twelve years ago. My mother and sister and I went to live at the old Dewey Hotel, where many Congressmen then resided, and where Mr. PADGETT and his dear wife, to whom our sympathies flow out so largely on this occasion, made their home. I have very delightful recollections of those two or three years at that hostelry, where, for instance, I came to know and love George Legaré, of South Carolina, who, after an heroic struggle, succumbed to disease, and where I first made the acquaintance and afterwards the enduring friendship of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], whose voluntary retirement from this body is a matter of universal regret to his colleagues, a personal regret to me, and a distinct loss to his country.

Thrown in that way with Mr. PADGETT I early came to admire him, and as my revered colleague from Louisiana, the late General Estopinal, with whom I was on the closest terms of friendship, was on the Naval Affairs Committee with Mr. PADGETT and regarded him highly and agreed with him in the actions of that committee, I came to know him more intimately. The closer one was brought to him and the better one knew him, the more one came to esteem and respect him, and so when, in my enforced absence from Washington I read in my home papers of his death I felt a sense of real sorrow which I will bear with me always, and which I poorly, but sincerely, record to-day.

The first time I ever heard Mr. PADGETT speak was on the occasion of services like these held on the floor of this House in memory of that beloved Louisianian, the late Senator Samuel Douglas McEnery. His address on that occasion impressed me deeply. I have often thought of what he said that morning. I recently found same in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 26, 1911, and I can not better close this tribute to LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT than by quoting a brief passage from his remarks on that day, which seems so applicable to him:

> He was a man of broad sympathies. He had humanitarian views. His sympathies were as broad, as tender, and as generous as his conceptions of his duty to humanity. He was a man of broad intellectual tion, truly. If you mean the shedding of the habiliments of flesh, tion. He has ascended a considerable height on the mountain side of knowledge and of information and of learning; and from his viewpoint he was enabled to look out far and wide and have a large vision of the activities of men, the energies of life, and the sympathies of the brotherhood of man; and to these he measured up nobly and grandly.
> But, Mr. Speaker, he is gone—they say "dead." If you mean destruction, no. If you mean annihilation, nay. If you mean transition, truly. If you mean the shedding of the habiliments of flesh, that hamper and circumscribe and limit the possibilities, the hopes, the aspirations of the human soul and the human life, yes, indeed. Into a larger, better, more glorious life, where the responsibility shall be greater, where the opportunity shall be larger, where our capacity shall be commensurate with those opportunities, he is gone. As we stand at the grave we say, "We can follow no farther," and yet out of our souls comes the thought—
> I know not where His islands lift
> Their fronded palms in air;
> I only know I can not drift
> Beyond His love and care.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, there are many present here to-day who knew Mr. PADGETT for a longer time than I had, but during the five years when we were associated together here, I knew him well. I saw him and talked with him almost daily during the sessions of Congress.

I learned to love him. He was kind, gentle, and thoughtful in his personal contact with his friends. He was helpful to a new Member, and those who profited by his kindly advice will always be deeply grateful. I have known no one here who had a sounder judgment on public questions.

It was a great privilege to have been here during the war at the time he was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and hear him present the war-time needs of our Navy. He knew better than any other Member of Congress about our Navy. Fortunate was our country that it had a servant so well equipped for so great a service and at so critical a time. The huge bills he presented to the House were fully, clearly, and carefully explained. There were few who differed after he finished his speeches.

There have been few chairmen of great committees who have had the same confidence of the whole membership of the House as did Mr. PADGETT. Tennessee was proud of his record. It was a beautiful sight to see the great crowds of neighbors, friends, and home folks pay tribute to this great man when his body was taken to his home city, there to rest in its final resting place.

There comes a feeling of great grief when friends and colleagues of this noble man gather to pay tribute to his memory. We grieve because a beloved colleague has been taken from us, never to return; because the Nation has lost a faithful servant; because the State of Tennessee has lost one of its most distinguished citizens—we grieve with the son and daughter who are left without a father; we shed tears of grief for the lonely, loving wife who was left behind.

But there is a satisfaction to his friends and loved ones, because we know he was taken only after a long life of service, and that his soul is at peace, and his body rests in the soil he loved and near the people who loved him.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr Speaker, I have come here to-day to say a few words of tribute to the memory of my deceased friend.

When I first came to Congress, Mr. PADGETT and I boarded at the same place, and from that circumstance I came to know him well early in my service. During the long years which followed, this early acquaintance ripened into a genuine friendship, which grew stronger with the years.

In 1898 the country was thrilled by the performances of our Navy in the Spanish War, and the national heroes who came out of that war were sailors. Every boy knew the names of the ships of Dewey's fleet and his famous command to Captain Gridley became the correct formula with which to start all the games on the college green.

Just before I came to Congress, under the compulsion of this all-pervading sentiment, in common with well nigh everybody else, I read Captain Mahan's book on the "Influence of Sea Power in History." This hardened my enthusiasm into a fixed conviction, and I became an advocate of what we then called a big Navy.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress Mr. PADGETT was assigned to the Committee on Naval Aaffirs and became at once a deep student of all the details of that service, and I became his pupil. It was, no doubt, in some sense due to this fact that I was attracted to him early in my service and came to know him more intimately than it is usually given us to know those with whom we here serve.

We live in an age of specialists, and this is true in this House as elsewhere. Except in rare and exceptional instances, the men who render the best service in this House are specialists in some one branch of legislative activity.

When Mr. PADGETT became a minority Member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, he set himself the task of mastering the subject, and few men have had more marked success.

Always conservative—too conservative, I sometimes thought, in the first few years of his service when in private conversation I frequently matched my enthusiasm against his knowledge—he was nevertheless always a steadfast advocate of adequate naval preparedness and equipment. He was not a frequent speaker, and during the first 10 years of his service he rarely spoke except on the general subject of the Navy, and usually to some particular phase of that subject to which he had devoted much thought and study.

During this period, he and I were members of a congressional party which visited the Hawaiian Islands. As always happens on such occasions, there were many calls for speeches as we traveled through the islands, and I then discovered, what I had not suspected before, that he was one of the readiest and most felicitous extempore speakers in Congress.

There were two characteristics, or attributes, or, maybe I should say qualities, which gave him power as a debater in this House, where I believe speakers are more nearly put to the acid test than anywhere else on earth.

He never entered a debate on any subject that he had not thoroughly studied, if I may not say—mastered. He knew the facts, and we all know the full import of that meaningful statement. Without a knowledge of the facts, no debater can succeed before an audience of intelligence and intellectual integrity. With it few can be vanquished.

The other quality was an unruffled spirit. There was never a truer saying and nowhere so thoroughly verified as here than the old adage, "Whom the gods wish to destroy, they first make mad." It was evident to all of us who watched him on this floor that the gods had no wish to destroy him.

His powers of self-control were put to the test of fire when he was chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee. Few bills were discussed with so much spirit and bitterness as the bills he reported in the soul-trying years from August 1, 1914, when the European War broke out, and the 6th of April, 1917, when the flames of that frightful conflagration at last involved us. Crimination and recrimination were the order of the day; words which he had spoken in the piping times of peace were quoted to show his inconsistency now when the furies had filled this turbulent earth with a breed of new, unwelcomed, and perplexing difficulties; but through it all he kept his head, and better still he kept his temper. Unkind, ungenerous, and unfriendly thrusts, and sometimes from his own party associates, were parried by the retort courteous; and assaults vehement, vigorous, and ill-tempered were met only with that cold logic which knowledge alone can beget.

When the historian of the future comes to write the legislative history of the Great War and studies the record Mr. PADGETT made as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, not alone in those sad and bitter months when we were passing through the fiery ordeal, but of the trying years immediately preceding, his name will be written high upon the scroll of honorable achievement.

Hard study had equipped him for the task, and when opportunity knocked, though accompanied by direful possibilities, he was ready for the high responsibility and met it well—

> And so he won his spurs, and his fair fame
> So hedged about, so buttressed and steel ribbed
> With truth, withstood the shafts of weaker fiber
> And will endure.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, on the 2d day of August, 1922, removed from the ranks of earthly endeavor Hon. LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Tennessee.

By his death his native State lost a loyal and gifted son, the Federal Government a conscientious and patriotic legislator, his family a loving and devoted husband and father, his associates a steadfast and sympathetic friend. To perpetuate his cherished memory and testify to his lofty ideals and the veneration in which he was held by his colleagues in Congress it is my privilege—sad, indeed, when I contemplate the loss of my friend, yet happy when I review his noble life and brilliant record—to offer in affectionate remembrance this tribute to the character, aspirations, and achievements of our late associate, LEMUEL PHILLIPS PADGETT—a gentleman of exalted principles and unsullied honor, cultured and hospitable—whose honesty of purpose, sincerity of motives, kindness of heart, and courtesy of manner endeared him to all who enjoyed the privilege of his friendship.

As a consistent party man Mr. PADGETT had the confidence of his party associates and was loyal in his fealty and devotion to Democratic doctrines. While a strong partisan in politics, he was always fair and magnanimous to his political opponents and his actions were free from malice or vindictiveness.

Mr. PADGETT was appointed a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress and was its chairman from the Sixty-second to the Sixty-fifth Congress, inclusive. His service on the committee covered a period of 18 years, and during that time more constructive legislation was enacted for the Navy than at any other period of its history.

He was one of the best-informed men on naval affairs in Congress, and members of the committee, as well as Members of the House, were guided by his mature judgment and accepted his views as the advice of an expert. He had a remarkably retentive memory and could quote laws bearing on naval matters that had been enacted many years previously. Under his chairmanship the bill carrying the greatest amount of money ever appropriated for naval purposes was enacted into law. Believing in a strong, adequate Navy, prepared for any emergency, it was ever his hope that peace, not war, should mark its history.

The paths of his public life were crowned with honors and vested with responsibilities and opportunities. Modesty and self-effacement were prevailing traits of his character and no stain of personal greed or private profit ever marred his record. His hands were never soiled by the betrayal of a public or private trust. He served his State and his Nation for the service he might render, free from selfishness or ostentation. While not a great orator he possessed strength of expression and exerted an influence borne of respect, intelligence, and energy. With an unclouded intellect and intrepid patriotism there was combined sound reasoning and mature judgment. With indifference to the plaudits of his fellows, one act accomplished, he proceeded quietly to another. His life and services are a fitting example and inspiration for the emulation of those who follow after, for in him was personified a life that was worthily lived. In his death his constituents lost a courteous, faithful, and efficient representative; his State a most distinguished citizen; his country an able and honorable statesman, and his colleagues a beloved associate.

> We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts not breaths;
> In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
> We should count the time by heart throbs,
> He most lives
> Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I can not recall the exact time when I first saw Mr. PADGETT, but my memory is impressed with the last time I saw him. Then my fears were aroused lest I might not see him again. The same cheerfulness which was one of his attractive features remained with him. We stood in his office door, where we had often stood, talking of the work which we had before us. Evidently he thought we would meet again. I bade him good-by, feeling that our separation was final and that death might create the separation. While I am writing these lines I am wondering why the feeling which I have spoken of should have possessed me. Neither his manner nor his speech indicated apprehension. Death had not yet put its cross upon his face and his smile was not made to disarm me.

I have witnessed the uneven struggle which one afflicted as he was always makes with the enemy of life, yet his going away forever shocked me as it did few others, because of the close official relationship which we had, covering a period of nearly two decades. Death not only stings the living, but leaves a lonesome feeling, which anyone who knew LEMUEL P. PADGETT well is bound to have. Not merely a loss of ordinary association, but the breaking of a tie made while serving in a common cause with similar views and purposes, bent upon reaching the same objective.

We worked together side by side for 16 long years, differing at times, but only upon the road which we should take to reach a given point. Well, did he know his lesson? Never in that whole period did he fail once, because his ideals were high and always within his reach. He was the best-informed man upon any subject he discussed I have ever seen. All of us who stop to recall our experience with him will agree that he never assumed a leadership unless the subject involved was one with which he had had much to do. It was then that his remarkable memory aided him in his clear and logical reasoning, which brought conviction to his listeners, because all men who knew him had confidence in the accuracy of his speech, as well as in its sincerity.

During his long service here he either wrote or assisted others in writing every law affecting the Navy, both persons and things. Many of these laws which he constructed practically alone will be known by his name, as they should be, and will stand unrepealed and not materially amended for all time to come. The most noticeable service of this distinguished man was rendered between 1915 and 1919. He was during that period, as he had been for several years prior, the chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee. Upon him came the great work of preparing the Navy for the war. The personnel had to be reorganized and the implements had to be provided. Those of us now living and who worked with him stand as witnesses to the enormous amount of work which he accomplished in the most masterful way. It fills volumes and will be a constant speaking witness for all time to come of the patriotism of our friend and the inestimable value of the service which he rendered his Government during its trying times.

Mr. PADGETT was a delightful companion, naturally unselfish, helpful to others, and always willing to divide honors with those not fully deserving to be considered in their division. If he had pleasures before him he asked others to share in them. He was mild of manner, modest in his conduct, and without the bitterness of speech oftentimes found in one as learned as he. He was never impatient with the ignorant, and always imparted his unusual knowledge without embarrassment to him who sought it.

While I write this somewhat incoherent comment upon his public service I am reminded constantly of the precision with which he always spoke and the directness he employed in reaching the point involved. I am not overstating his capabilities when I say that no man within my knowledge has ever shown such dissecting powers as were at his command. His committee associates appealed to him on every occasion to take the tangles out of measures which seemed to them unintelligible. He was a student, and acquired his knowledge, as all truly learned men acquire theirs, by work and reflection. He was as well acquainted with the technical features of naval law and naval regulation as he was with those which any of us could readily understand. He knew the name of every warship, its dimensions, and its destructive power; he could compare them with similar ships of other nations without assistance from military men. He had at hand the numbers of officers in different grades, and was as well acquainted with their efficiency as the service itself. He was a wise legislator, in that he possessed a correct vision of what was necessary to be done in order to furnish the Government with its needful defense. While some of his associates differed at times with him, many of us are now convinced of the strength of his judgment. All in all, he was the best of us engaged in a common undertaking.

He had many virtues; the most prominent of them, his domestic life, was a model and will stand as worthy of imitation. His devotion to his family was apparent at all times. His love for it was manifested upon proper occasions, and fully and sincerely reciprocated. I have noticed many instances of his devotion to his wife and son when he thought of their comfort and not of his own. His sorrows were many; but he always suffered alone, without intruding them upon strangers with the expectation of receiving their consolation.

Without affectation it can be truthfully said of our long-time friend that he was a tireless and intelligent worker in his country's service, positively appreciated by both his constituency and his fellow associates. His country owes him much for that faithful service rendered by its intelligent and industrious servant.

Mr. RIORDAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness that I rise to pay my tribute to my friend Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT. I have known him since my service in this House began. For 10 years I have served with him on the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and there learned to love and respect him in a high degree.

He was a man of kindly, gentle disposition; he was a sincere and faithful friend; he was a master of legislation; he was a tireless, indefatigable worker; he was a most capable and efficient chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee during the most critical times in the history of the Navy and of the Nation; and he never lost an opportunity to render to the Navy intelligent service and his every assistance.

Mr. Speaker, words can not express the value of the service that Mr. PADGETT rendered to his district, his State, the Navy, and to his country during his service here. He was the most kindly hearted man I ever knew; always genial, courteous, modest, and of even temper, and, by his complete knowledge of naval problems, was always listened to, and his opinions always carried attention and respect.

As I stood at his open grave at Rose Hill Cemetery, in the beautiful little city of Columbia, Tenn., where his mortal remains were laid away by loving hands in presence of a vast concourse of his neighbors, friends, and constituents, I hoped that his memory would long last in his district and his people long remember that they had given in him to his country a really great chairman of the great Naval Committee of this House at a time when the need thereof was so great.

May he rest in peace till we are all summoned to answer the great roll call, when he will meet so many who loved him here.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolutions heretofore adopted, the House will stand adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, January 22, 1923, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

(Legislative day of Sunday, January 21, 1923.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1923.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. IRVINE L. LENROOT, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. LENROOT thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

France	McCormick	Ransdell	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Reed, Pa.	Willis
George	McKellar	Sheppard

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. POMERENE] on account of illness. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is detained at a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations on the War Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DEPARTMENTAL USE OF AUTOMOBILES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate two communications from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, in response to Senate Resolution 399, agreed to January 6, 1923, relative to the number and use of automobiles by the United States Shipping Board and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, respectively, both within and without the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

SENATOR FROM NEVADA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented the certificate of the Governor of Nevada certifying to the election of KEY PITTMAN as a Senator from the State of Nevada for the term beginning March 4, 1923, which was read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

STATE OF NEVADA,
Executive Department.

Whereas at the general election held in the State of Nevada on the 7th day of November, 1922, KEY PITTMAN was duly elected to the office of Senator from the State of Nevada and to represent said State in the Senate in the Congress of the United States for the term of six years from and after the 4th day in March, 1923.

Now, therefore, I, Emmet D. Boyle, Governor of the State of Nevada, by the authority in me vested by the constitution and laws thereof, do hereby commission him, the said KEY PITTMAN, Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Nevada, and authorize him to discharge the duties of said office according to law, and to hold and enjoy the same, together with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments thereunto appertaining, for the term as aforesaid.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of State to be affixed, at Carson City, this 26th day of December, A. D. 1922.

[SEAL.]

EMMET D. BOYLE,
Governor of the State of Nevada.

By the governor:

GEORGE BRODIGAN,
Secretary of State.

STABILIZATION OF PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to present a telegram from the bankers of Yakima County, Wash., asking for the stabilization of prices of farm products. I ask that the telegram, together with the names of the senders, be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Western Union telegram.]

YAKIMA, WASH., January 19, 1923.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned bankers of the county of Yakima, Wash., claim that it is practically impossible for bankers or the Government to finance farmers without stabilization of prices.

Yakima County Bankers: W. L. Boomer, Sunnyside, Wash.; A. L. Thielle, Grandview, Wash.; J. E. Foss, Mabton, Wash.; H. E. Schneider, Outlook; J. M. Christensen, Granger; L. H. Kuhn, Zillah, Wash.; A. M. Price, Zillah, Wash; Central Bank of Toppenish, Toppenish, Wash.; First National Bank of Toppenish, Toppenish, Wash.; J. E. McGrath, Moxee City, Wash.; Elmer Dahlin, Selah, Wash.; C. H. Eckmann, Buena, Wash.; J. T. Hedges, Yakima, Wash.; H. Stanley Coffin, Yakima, Wash.

COAL SHORTAGE IN NEW ENGLAND.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a resolution unanimously adopted at a public meeting held in Faneuil Hall, Boston, Mass., Sunday, January 21, for the purpose of protesting the present coal shortage in New England and asking for action by the Government to relieve the distressing situation which now exists.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it is published that large quantities of American anthracite coal are being shipped to Canada and there retailed at $2 to $7 less a ton than here: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, citizens of Boston assembled in historic Faneuil Hall, call upon the Senate of these United States to enact with all possible haste the necessary legislation that will empower the President to authorize an embargo prohibiting the exportation of anthracite coal.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I move that this resolution be treated in the nature of a petition and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I also send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the same committee an important communication from the president of the City of Lynn Chamber of Commerce, calling attention to certain abuses and hardships suffered by the people of New England due to shortage of coal and the inferior qualities of coal now being sold to consumers. I hope some legislation along the line suggested may be speedily enacted.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LYNN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Lynn, Mass., January 20, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Care of United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Mr. William H. Day, jr., the secretary of the Lynn Chamber of Commerce, during this winter has been the State coal administrator for Lynn, Mass.

As I am president of the Lynn Chamber of Commerce, I have naturally been very close to the whole arrangement and have, as the result of this contact, come to the conclusion that the United States as a nation should positively and without delay establish heating standards per ton for both anthracite and bituminous coal in a way that the coal at the mines will be shipped out according to these standards.

It is terrible enough in the cold weather such as we are having, with 3 feet of snow on the ground for weeks and the temperature around zero, to know that there are at least 3,500 families in the Lynn district who have been unable to get hardly enough fuel to cook a single meal a day, let alone keep warm. In many of these families there is sickness, and in many others there are young children to whom some heat is absolutely necessary, and the suffering and sacrifice and privation that they have gone through this winter is terrible, and never should be permitted again by an intelligent Christian Nation.

In the small amount of anthracite coal that comes into Lynn only about 65 per cent of it is combustible fuel; the rest of it is of a fireproof variety that refuses to burn in any event. As for the bituminous coal that comes here, it is in even worse condition. I doubt, after having experience with the complaints that have been sent in during the past few months, if even 50 per cent of it is combustible and heat-producing. It is full of dirt, sulphur, and rock, and these miserable qualities of fuel have been obtainable only in the smallest possible quantities and at a price that is so fabulous that only the wealthy and influential citizens, political or otherwise, are able to obtain enough to keep warm. The poor and humbler citizens of the community are paying anywhere from $18 to $22 per ton for coal that is so miserable in quality that it should never have been shipped from the mines in any event.

These abuses, I believe, can only be corrected by national legislation; no single State can attempt it without being disciplined by the mine owners or operators for such an effort.

I earnestly hope, and the people in this district earnestly hope, that you may be able to introduce, advocate, and encourage some national legislation that will prevent this kind of so-called coal from being sold to consumers for heating purposes.

With best wishes to you in this effort, believe me,

Very truly yours,

RALPH S. BAUER,
President Lynn Chamber of Commerce.

SILVER.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask leave to have published in the RECORD a letter which I have written to the governor of my State relative to silver legislation. I make that request in order not to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the matter here on the floor.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, January 17, 1923.

HON. EMMET D. BOYLE,
Reno, Nev.

DEAR GOVERNOR: I invite your criticism of my views with regard to the silver situation and proposed legislation now pending in the United States Senate. The legislation now pending is as follows:

Resolution prepared by the committee of the mining congress and introduced by Senator NICHOLSON, known as Senate Concurrent Resolution 31, a copy of which I inclose.

A bill introduced by Senator KING, of Utah, known as S. 4277, to compel the Treasury Department to sell the remaining eighty millions of silver dollars authorized for sale under the Pittman Act.

I consider it unnecessary to discuss the King bill. The Treasury Department already, under the Pittman Act, has authority to sell these eighty million silver dollars, and Congress will not, in my opinion, pass an act compelling the Treasury Department to sell this silver against its judgment. Of course, we all wish that we could compel them to sell it at a dollar an ounce. In the first place, we have got to provide a market at a dollar an ounce before the Treasury Department can sell it for a dollar an ounce.

The Nicholson resolution offers the foundation for legislation, but, in my opinion, the authority granted the commission is totally inadequate to accomplish any beneficial results. It simply authorizes a commission appointed by the President to use its influence to stabilize the price of silver and to confer with the foreign governments for this purpose, and to report back to the President its recommendations. This, in my opinion, would mean nothing except the delaying of urgent action.

At a recent hearing on the resolution before the Committee on Mines and Mining, I presented these criticisms and stated that when the committee went into executive session I would offer amendments to the resolution empowering the committee to investigate all conditions affecting the production, reduction, refining, marketing, sale, and use of gold and silver, and to this end granting unto the commission authority to subpœna and administer oaths to witnesses and to take such other steps as will discover practices discriminatory against the gold and silver mining industry.

It seems useless, if not absurd, to attempt to induce foreign governments to agree on a price for silver at a dollar an ounce or above that price so long as the price of silver in the world market is below a dollar an ounce and the price is absolutely and arbitrarily fixed by a committee of London brokers with the sanction and support of the British Government.

We have got to raise and maintain the world price of silver at or above a dollar an ounce before we can hope for international stabilization of silver at any price above a dollar an ounce. In my opinion, it is easy to accomplish this. The world production of silver is small. Great efforts to increase its production to any extent have failed. The average annual production over a period of 20 years of approximately 170,000,000 ounces is an insignificant quantity by comparison with other products that are being successfully stabilized through industrial organization. The ease with which such an organization could be successfully organized is apparent when we realize that over 90 per cent of the production of the world is in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, and over 90 per cent of this production is controlled by citizens and corporations of the United States. As a matter of fact, the great bulk of this production is controlled by 10 or 15 institutions.

The vice president of the American Smelting & Refining Co., at a recent hearing before the Committee on Mines and Mining, testified that they had been unable to form a selling and credit association up to the present time because of the banks being opposed to lending the necessary capital upon silver bullion. It is impossible for me to conceive of any reason in support of such a statement. I know of no better security in the world than silver bullion at 40 cents an ounce.

This same witness testified that it would probably take $10,000,000 or more to finance such a corporation. The capital could be raised upon American bullion alone based on a value of 15 cents an ounce.

The real reason, in my opinion, for the failure of the organization is that the smelter companies have failed to give their aid to the organization of such an association. In fact, the smelters control the marketing of the great bulk of the production of the silver of the United States, Canada, and Mexico. The vice president of the American Smelting & Refining Co., in the testimony that I have referred to, admitted that the smelter companies were not particularly interested in the price of silver, as they pay the producers the market price and sell it at the market price. This statement explains the whole situation.

It is grossly selfish and unfair for the smelter companies to maintain this attitude. Public sentiment in the gold and silver mining States will not tolerate it. The smelter companies can be induced to give their aid to the organization, maintenance, and operation of a credit and selling association for silver. It should be within the power of such a commission, and it should be the duty of such a commission, to present such inducements to the smelter companies as would bring about an early organization of such an association. If necessary, I intend to present these inducements myself whether I am a member of a committee or a commission authorized for such purpose or not.

In my opinion, American silver will never again go below a dollar an ounce. This opinion is based upon these facts: The limited occurrence of silver in nature; the small production; the great demand; the inevitable increase in demand with the growth of industry and commerce in China, in India, and in South America; and the control of the world marketing of silver by an American organization.

Sincerely,

KEY PITTMAN.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions of the Clay County (Minn.) National Farm Loan Association, both approving and disapproving of sundry proposed amendments to the Federal farm loan act, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, favoring the granting of a per capita allowance by the Federal Government for the relief of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

A concurrent resolution requesting the Congress and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the United States to grant relief to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

Whereas by reason of crop failures and unusually low prices for farm products there is widespread suffering among the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota; and

Whereas the funds held in trust for them by the United States is sufficient for the purpose hereinafter stated: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring). That the Congress and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the United States be, and hereby are, requested to make each Indian of the Minnesota Chippewa Tribe who is entitled thereto a per capita payment of $200 out of the funds of said tribe so held in trust; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the House, the President of the Senate, and to each representative of the State of Minnesota in the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution of the W. T. K. Club, of Wheatland, Wyo., favoring an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition, numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of North Dakota, favoring the prompt passage of legislation extending immediate aid to the famine-stricken peoples of the German and Austrian Republics, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution of the McVille National Farm Loan Association, of McVille, N. Dak., protesting against the passage of the so-called Strong bill, amending certain sections of the Federal farm loan act but indorsing the provisions increasing the limit for one borrower from $10,000 to $25,000, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of Fred W. Norton Post, No. 141, American Legion of Ohio, at Columbus, Ohio, favoring the making of adequate appropriations for maintenance of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRED W. NORTON POST, No. 141.
AMERICAN LEGION OF OHIO,
Columbus, Ohio, January 18, 1923.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The following resolution was adopted by the Fred W. Norton Post, No. 141, American Legion, Columbus, Ohio, on January 17, 1923:

"Whereas the Army appropriation bill has just been reported out of the subcommittee of the House of Representatives, and the subcommittee has seen fit to cut the appropriations for the War Department $10,000,000 below the figure recommended by the Director of the Budget, and has cut the allowance for the training of reserve officers $1,133,709 from the figure recommended by the Budget Director; and

"Whereas there is the possibility of the reserve forces of the United States Army being called into service due to the critical situation that exists in Europe; and

"Whereas adequate training of the reserve forces is of paramount importance to the safety of the country in time of war, and the failure of Congress to appropriate sufficient for the proper training of the reserve in the past is their apparent policy for the present and future: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Fred W. Norton Post, No. 141, American Legion, Columbus, Ohio, composed of ex-service men who have served their country and feel that they are not only somewhat qualified but considerably justified in expressing their views on the subject of national defense, That the action of the subcommittee of the House of Representatives in cutting the appropriation recommended by the Budget Director be condemned as unwise and short-sighted economy, and that every Member of Congress be urged to fix the appropriations for the Army at a figure at least equivalent to that set by the Budget Director; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS, Senator from this State, and to every other Representative and Senator from Ohio, in order that they might be advised of the attitude of the ex-service men and men of the reserve forces with reference to proper and sufficient appropriations for adequate national defense."

It is hoped that your action on the matter of appropriations will be in accord with our views expressed herein.

Respectfully yours.

FRED W. NORTON POST, No. 141, AMERICAN LEGION,
By THOS. J. MEEHAN, Adjutant.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions adopted by the sixteenth annual Farmers' Institute at Waynesfield, Ohio, favoring the passage of legislation to extend the scope of the bonded warehouse act to all farm products in their natural and processed forms, and also making it mandatory upon the Federal reserve banks to make loans upon security of warehouse centificates, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4379) to amend section 1709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1029) thereon.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 3078) to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1030) thereon.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1031) for the relief of Eugene K. Stoudemire, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1031) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DIAL:

A bill (S. 4387) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Tugaloo River between South Carolina and Georgia; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4388) granting a pension to Clara Herley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4389) for the relief of John N. Knauff Co. (Inc.); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GERRY:

A bill (S. 4391) for the relief of Elizabeth Tabele; and

A bill (S. 4392) for the relief of Daniel A. Spaight; to the Committee on Claims.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS OF WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing that any officer or former officer of a staff department who prior to August 1, 1921, was placed on duty requiring him to participate in regular and frequent aerial flights by the commanding office of the aviation station, camp, school, field, post, or aeronautical organization in the field, and who performed the amount of flying duty required and drew the additional pay authorized by law therefor, and who has been compelled to repay to the United States the money so drawn by him or has had the same stopped against his pay, shall be entitled to receive from the current appropriation for pay of the Army the amount of money so repaid by or stopped against him, and all payments heretofore made to officers of staff departments for duty requiring them to participate in regular and frequent aerial flights are hereby ratified and confirmed; intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13793, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000,000 for the improvement of nitrate plant No. 1, at Muscle Shoals, Ala., by the installation of new machinery therein in order that said plant may be utilized for experimental purposes in extracting nitrogen from the air with the view of lessening the cost of explosives in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace; intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13793, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 416), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 468, agreed to March 3, 1921, authorizing the Committee on Public Lands to employ an assistant clerk, payable out of the contingent fund, during the Sixty-seventh Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-eighth Congress.

PORTO RICAN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BROOKHART submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32), which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions:

Whereas it has been repeatedly reported to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of War by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, the War Labor Board, Gen. Frank McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, the American Federation of Labor representatives, and the Free Federation of Workingmen of Porto Rico facts about the deplorable conditions which exist among the people of the island of Porto Rico, and which unbearable conditions do no credit to the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the said United States Commission on Industrial Relations, the War Labor Board, and the representatives of the workers of Porto Rico, and the conventions of the American Federation of Labor repeatedly requested the previous and present administrations to cause a thorough investigation into the governmental affairs of the island of Porto Rico and have urged that such an investigation be ordered by Congress; and

Whereas it has been declared by the people of Porto Rico that several officials of the Government of the island, as such, have been guilty of repeated acts of dishonest administration and unlawful conduct and cruelty in dealing with the workers of said island in that—

(1) During the last eight years a number of crimes have been committed by local authorities as a result of breaking strikes by force and terror; about 20 workers having been killed by the bullets of the police and agents of the employers; hundreds of workers have been sent to jail; many abuses have been committed by local magistrates and many evictions of strikers have taken place without due process of law; the right of free speech has been denied in many instances, and hundreds of peaceful meetings and parades have been dispersed by force and scores of men, women, and children have been injured as a result of police and the employers' agents brutalities.

(2) Porto Rico is being kept as a factory exploited for the benefit of the few and to the detriment of the majority of our starved people. The representatives of sordid and greedy interests has been commonly the voice heard during the past eight years in the governmental councils, while the wretched masses are pitilessly and mercilessly treated at the hands of conscienceless employers, local police, and magistrates.

(3) The absentee property owners and foreign corporations have grown rich owing to hard and ill paid labor. Industrial depression and speculation, in brotherly union, are also enjoying their heyday. Rents and interest rates have been rising progressively. The cost of living his risen disproportionately. The enormous wealth produced by the agricultural and industrial workers has gone over the seas in the shape of rents to be expended mostly in other more fortunate communities.

(4) The resolution adopted by the Congress of the United States with the purpose of preventing the monopolization and control of land and business in Porto Rico, as shown by the following clause, has been grossly violated:

"No corporation shall be authorized to conduct the business of buying and selling real estate or to be permitted to hold or own real estate, except such as may be reasonably necessary to enable it to carry out the purpose for which it was created, and every corporation hereafter authorized to engage in agriculture shall by its charter be restricted to the ownership and control of not to exceed 500 acres of land, and this provision shall be held to prevent any member of the corporation engaged in agriculture from being in anywise interested in any other corporation engaged in agriculture.

About a dozen corporations possess and control over 300,000 acres of the best land, in violation of the law.

(5) Laborers in Porto Rico, including men, women, and children, are employed at wages which are inadequate to furnish proper food and clothing. The wages of men in agricultural districts range from 35 to 60 cents a day when employed, and those of the women and children are about one-half that amount.

(6) As a result largely of the low wage standard, the diet of the laborers, consisting chiefly of rice, beans, codfish, and plantains, is so miserably inadequate that the workers not only are rendered inefficient but are to a large extent undernourished.

(7) The laborers are further exploited on the large plantations, according to the testimony of Government representatives by exorbitant prices for food and other supplies, by deliberate cheating as regards weights and measures, and by unwarranted deductions from their wages for goods that were never purchased.

(8) The educational facilities of Porto Rico are so totally inadequate that there are over 200,000 children for whose education no provision has been made.

(9) Many thousands of working people located in the rural districts, far from medical attendance and unable to afford the high charges of the physicians, die yearly without medical attendance.

(10) General McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, in his annual report of 1921 says:

"The evidence on every hand of prosperity and progress in Porto Rico and the prosperity and progress shown by the commercial statistics and by the increased revenues by the government may easily mislead one into the belief that progress in all directions has been satisfactory. This is not the case. It has been impossible to distribute this progress in Porto Rico in such a way that the very large extremely poor element of Porto Rico could participate fairly in it. These people, because of their relative helplessness, must for some years receive special governmental contributions."

(11) Evidence of corruption of officers of the bureau of income tax of Porto Rico can be obtained by comparing figures below, which show the condition prevailing:

Corporations.	Tons of sugar produced in 1920.	Net income as returned or disclosed by investigation.	Tax assessed as the net income appears now.
South P. R. Sugar Co., and allied companies	59,064	$1,737,000.00	$255,492.00
Central Aguiere Sugar Co. and allied companies	54,083	7,693,508.00	978,900.00
Plazuela Sugar Co	17,250	359,526.00	21,043.08
Central Cambalache	16,927	1,278,580.00	111,483.00
Sucs. C. & J. Fantauzzy	15,334	1,202,580.00	195,455.54
Central Vannina	12,921	1,041,000.00	177,130.64

There are other facts showing the corruption existing at present in the income tax law administration, but those stated herein are sufficient to justify any action to be taken.

(12) The income-tax return to Mr. Frederico Calaf, one of the wealthiest men in Porto Rico, does not include the income from sugars in stock, but includes as a deduction the amount of $70,000 donated to the Unionist Party in power for election purposes. Such deduction is not allowable within the act. Inspectors trying to investigate Mr. Calaf's books were ordered to give up their work.

(13) The Spanish Railroad Co. and the American Railroad Co. of Porto Rico for several years have not paid property or business taxes to the Government of Porto Rico, and in 1922 these companies paid only $2,270.79 of insular income tax, while in the same year they paid $35,851.21 of taxes on bonds of the French Government and $240,647.67 as interest to the absentee profiteers.

(14) The Workmen's Relief Commission of Porto Rico is being assailed by the combined corporations and by interests of sugar, tobacco, railroads, ship companies, street-car railways, which have refused to pay the premiums to said commission for the injuries and death of workers as the result of accidents occurring in their work. These combined corporations and big interests have decided to annul the workmen's accident compensation act of Porto Rico.

(15) The South Porto Rico Sugar Corporation has financed the construction of the Sugar Central "La Romana" in Santo Domingo with over $8,000,000 from the net profits obtained from the poor and underfed workers of Porto Rico, after paying yearly dividends since 1918 of 38 per cent, while it is now refusing to pay the proper taxes to Porto Rico.

(16) That sugar centrals combined with the treasurer of Porto Rico and obtained a reduction of 30 per cent in the taxation of their properties in order to avoid the payment of taxes, to the great detriment of education and sanitation for the people of Porto Rico.

(17) That the telephone company of Porto Rico, through the Department of the Interior of Porto Rico, is taking control of the telegraph and telephone service in several towns in the island that were in the service and property of the insular government.

(18) That the deliberately antagonistic attitude of the attorney general's office to the interest of the people and the administration is intolerable. This official is failing to render any cooperation to defend the interests of the people, but has given ample evidence that he is systematically obstructing the administration, going so far as to permit the facilities of his department to be used to protect the exploiters of the island.

(19) The abuse of the pardoning power in Porto Rico has been perverted in the past when convicted criminals of the rich and powerful class have been released in a few weeks, no matter for how many years they were sentenced. No rich person can be found in the jails of Porto Rico, even if he has committed the most terrible crimes.

Whereas the petitions for a thorough investigation of the conditions of the governmental affairs of the people of Porto Rico have been repeatedly requested by the American Federation of Labor in the past years of the Presidents and the various commissions in charge of investigations into conditions of the working people of the United States; and

Whereas the charges and statements herein referred to demonstrate that there exists in Porto Rico a deplorable condition which is affecting the economic conditions and the very life of the great bulk of the people of the island, and the only way to find out the truth is by means of an investigation, with the purpose of finding a remedy for conditions herein related that at least give no credit to our country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee of the Senate and the House be directed to investigate the governmental affairs of Porto Rico during the last 10 years, the conduct of the officials of the insular government, the industrial and economic and living conditions of the people of the island, and to report their findings and recommendations to the Senate and House as speedily as possible.

Resolved further, That this joint committee of the Senate and the House shall be composed of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, and shall have authority to send for persons and papers and to take testimony in San Juan, Ponce, and elsewhere in Porto Rico and the United States before said committee, and to sit during the sessions of the Congress or when Congress is in recess or vacation.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, to avoid any question as to the position of the unfinished business, I move to take it up, and I shall then ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the independent offices appropriation bill be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 39, line 8, in the appropriation "For expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation," it is proposed to strike out "$50,000,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$30,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the pending bill recites at the beginning—

That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, namely.

Then, on page 37 we find the heading, "United States Shipping Board," and for salaries and other purposes set forth in the bill. And at the end of line 3, on page 38, an appropriation of $317,500 is proposed. Then follow other provisions until we reach the item "Emergency shipping fund," and in line 23, on page 38, where the language reads as follows:

For expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, for administrative purposes, miscellaneous adjustments, losses due to the maintenance and operation of ships, for the tie-up, reconditioning and repair of ships, and for carrying out the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, (a) the amount on hand July 1, 1923, but not in excess of the sums sufficient to cover all obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1923, and then unpaid; (b) $50,000,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of claims other than those resulting from the current maintenance and operation of vessels; (c) the amount received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, from the operation of ships.

There seem to have been no hearings before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, so far as I have been able to learn, but the Senate Committee on Appropriations accepted this portion of the bill precisely as it came from the other House.

I might observe at the outset that it seems to me, under the new rule providing that subcommittees from the various standing committees shall sit with the Appropriations Committee when matters which fall within the jurisdiction of such standing committees are being considered before the Committee on Appropriations, it would be proper for the Committee on Appropriations to admit to its membership a subcommittee from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, composed of three members, to sit with it when the Appropriations Committee is considering appropriations for the Shipping Board and for the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The Committee on Commerce has handled legislation appertaining to that bureau or independent office. The shipping bill under which the Shipping Board was established was considered by the Commerce Committee and was reported by it. The merchant marine act of 1920 was considered and reported to the Senate by the Commerce Committee, and that committee has general jurisdiction over matters of commerce and those appertaining to shipping. I think it, therefore, but reasonable and fair to conclude that the Commerce Committee should be entitled to have a subcommittee composed of three of its members to sit with the Committee on Appropriations when that committee is considering appropriations for the Shipping Board and for the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Had that been the case, I might have been better informed as to the full meaning of the provisions of the bill to which I have referred, because, as ranking minority member of the Commerce Committee, I should have had some opportunity to become acquainted with the factors and elements entering into the appropriation before the bill came to the Senate. However, no subcommittee of the Commerce Committee had anything to do with the consideration of the bill; the Appropriations Committee took entire charge of it; and, so far as I have been able to learn—and I think that is correct—no hearings were had with reference to these items before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. We are, therefore, obliged to turn to the House hearings in order to secure information as to the meaning of the provisions of the bill.

First, I desire to suggest that the meaning of the following language, as found on page 39, beginning in line 5, of the bill, is not quite clear; it is difficult to understand precisely to what it refers—

(a) the amount on hand July 1, 1923, but not in excess of the sums sufficient to cover all obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1923, and then unpaid.

That amount, whatever it may be, is covered by this appropriation. Then follows a definite appropriation of $50,000,000, and in addition to that there is the further item:

(c) The amount received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, from the operation of ships.

So that this bill carries not merely the appropriation of $50,000,000 but the two items which I have mentioned. No one can know what those items will amount to; no one even approximately can estimate what will be "the amount received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, from the operations of ships." That amount may be $30,000,000, or it may be $40,000,000, but certainly it is not likely to be less than $30,000,000. Then, under item (a) the amount available will be perhaps $20,000,000; so that under the appropriation as it stands written in the bill there are made available $50,000,000 definitely stated, from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 under item (a), and from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 under item (b).

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Directing attention to item (a), namely, "the amount on hand July 1, 1923, but not in excess of the sums sufficient to cover all obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1923, and then unpaid," I should like to inquire of the Senator whether under the language employed that would be deemed an authorization to hold any sums on hand until all the obligations contracted by the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation from the beginning were paid. As I understand, all the obligations have not as yet been ascertained; in some instances suits are pending, in other instances claims have been preferred by persons having contracts with the Shipping Board, and in some cases the Shipping Board has set up counterclaims. What I should like to know is just what was meant by that language. Were there any particular sums which they had in mind which were to be liquidated, or were the Shipping Board to hold all sums they have on hand in anticipation of claims that are now pending and being adjusted and which may be settled next year or year after, or at some indefinite time in the future?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I gather that the clause must be construed in connection with the language which follows in the next paragraph whereby the sums "authorized under the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, remaining unexpended or uncommitted on July 1, 1923, shall be covered into the United States Treasury."

In other words, whatever is necessary out of that fund on hand July 1, 1923, to meet all of the obligations prior to July 1, 1923, is undoubtedly appropriated. I gather that that means that certain obligations have been adjusted or are about to be adjusted and will be adjusted before July 1, 1923, in which case the funds necessary to accomplish that adjustment will be used, and the remainder, I presume, will be paid into the Treasury. It is somewhat complicated and somewhat confusing. The statement appearing in the House hearings at page 286 sets forth the following figures:

Estimated net withdrawal for 1923		$38,508,515.25
Estimated net withdrawal for 1924		30,408,500.00

The amount of the net withdrawal represents the difference between the balances on hand at the beginning of the year and the balance on hand at the end of the year without regard to the gross receipts or gross disbursements of any one of several funds controlled by the Shipping Board or the Fleet Corporation.

The estimate for 1923 was arrived at as follows:

On July 1, 1922, there was on deposit in the United States Treasury cash or appropriations aggregating		$138,508,515.25
Made up as follows:
Cash in various funds	$43,049,515.25
Appropriations unexpended—
U. S. S. B.	459,000.00
U. S. S. B. E. F. C.	50,000,000.00
U. S. S. B. E. F. C.—Claims	45,000,000.00
	138,508,515.25
It is estimated that on June 30, 1923, there will be on deposit in the United States Treasury cash or appropriations unexpended in one fund or another, including miscellaneous receipts:
Claims appropriation unexpended	$25,000,000.00
Construction loan, 1922	25,000,000.00
Construction loan, 1923	25,000,000.00
Miscellaneous receipts and/or working cash	25,000,000.00
		100,000,000.00
Leaving a net withdrawal for for current year 1923		38,508,515.25

The estimate for 1924 was arrived at as follows:

On July 1, 1923, there will be on deposit in the United States Treasury cash or appropriations aggregating (assuming 1924 requests are granted)	125,408,500.00
Made up as follows:
U. S. S. B.—Claims appropriation	25,000,000.00
Construction loan fund, 1922	25,000,000.00
Construction loan fund, 1923	25,000,000.00
U. S. S. B.—Appropriations, 1924	408,500.00
U. S. S. B. E. F. C.—Appropriations, 1924	50,000,000.00

Leaving a net expenditure for the fiscal year of 1924 of $30,408,500.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that certainly is misleading, because a person reading the figures of net expenditures would reach the conclusion that the expenditures were very much less than what actually were made. The expenditures for 1924 will perhaps aggregate, with operating expenses and all, more than $100,000,000, if the same extravagant and inefficient and absurd methods of operation are perpetuated as have been followed in the past and as now exist.

Mr. FLETCHER. That item is made up of "claims appropriation unexpended, $20,000,000," and so on. The chairman undertakes to explain that in this way:

Now, the net result is this, Mr. Chairman, that the Shipping Board at the end of the present fiscal year will have $100,000,000 minimum on deposit with the United States Treasury. After paying all debts and reserving ample moneys for debts that are contracted we will have more than $100,000,000 on hand. Of the $100,000,000 on hand $25,000,000 of claims appropriations will be coverable to the Treasury, $25,000,000 of miscellaneous receipts will be covered into the Treasury, and the $50,000,000 remaining constitutes the construction loan fund of which I think very little under any circumstances will be used next year, even if the ship subsidy bill should pass, because the borrower will have to put in his own money first; and if the ship subsidy bill does not pass, if I should still be here, I should recommend to Congress covering practically all of that into the Treasury, because I do not think it would ever be needed.

It would appear that the amount appropriated for 1923, which was, emergency shipping fund, $100,000,000, was carried in the Interior Department bill for 1923. Now it is asked that there shall be appropriated in this bill $50,000,000 in addition to the other items which we have mentioned. A part of that $50,000,000 appropriated to settle claims in previous years has not been expended, but probably some further portion of it will be expended between now and July 1, 1923.

The hearings in the House to which I refer opened with Mr. Lasker's statement on page 261. Before I get to that, however, let me allude to the last item in the paragraph which I have mentioned, item C, the amount received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

According to the tables furnished in the House hearings, the amount received from operations is shown on page 307:

Statement of net cash receipts and net cash disbursements, period July 1, 1922, to November 30, 1922.

It appears that the amounts received from operations of vessels were as follows:

Freight, passenger, and other operations of vessels, revenue not otherwise classified, $48,252,046.80; charter-hire revenue, $242,142.44; making a total of $48,494,189.24 received from operation of vessels from July 1, 1922, to November 30, 1922. In this bill it is proposed to appropriate the entire amount received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, from the operation of ships. We know what the result was in 1922 down as far as November 30; and from July 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922, they received $93,480,836.35 from the operation of vessels; so that this item, (a), we can reasonably expect, will exceed the amount specified in this report at page 307.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. KING. I did not understand the Senator. I understood his figures to be $45,000,000 received from the operation of vessels. I find on page 306 a "statement of net cash receipts and net cash disbursements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922." Under the head of "Receipts from operations of vessels: Freight, passenger, and other operations of vessels, revenue not otherwise classified," the amount is given as $91,347,080.87.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is the charter hire in addition to that.

Mr. KING. Yes; the charter hire revenue is more than $2,000,000 in addition to that, making an aggregate of $93,480,836.35.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. That is for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. That is the whole of that year. What I was reading from was the statement on page 307 showing what was received from July 1, 1922, following the period to which the Senator referred, to November 30, 1922. Even for that time of five months this revenue was $48,494,189.24. For the year prior to that time the Senator is correct, as shown by that statement; the amount was $93,480,836.35. This amount I named is for only a portion of the year, but it is the last portion of the year, which it may be fairer to compare next year with than the year prior to that. That is the reason why I have used those figures; but I am glad the Senator calls attention to what was actually received for 12 months of the previous year.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator also taking into account the receipts from the sale of vessels, tugs, barges, real estate, buildings, and improvements, plants, equipment, and property not otherwise classified, including surplus and salvage material and any other material not otherwise classified, and fuel oil, aggregating for the period from July 1, 1922, to November 30, 1922, $17,982,789.25?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; and I think the hearings will show just what have been received. Does the Senator refer to the last statement? Where did the Senator obtain those figures?

Mr. KING. The Senator will find the figures to which I just called his attention on page 307 of the House hearings.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I note that.

In the hearings, at page 280, Mr. Lasker said:

On July 1, 1922, there were 1,246 claims before us amounting to $135,006,532.82 and under date of December 9, 1922, there were still unsettled 274 claims amounting to $55,531,551. The claims settled up to December 9, since last July 1, when you gave us the appropriation, amount to $79,479,979.82, or 78 per cent of the claims in number. We have settled those claims—these are all construction claims that I refer to—for $18,019,742.70 in cash and kind, in which is included contractors' claims settled to the extent of 96 disallowances, totaling $3,237,234.96.

This eighteen million and odd dollars was paid subject to $9,214,620.71, either offset of materials that claimants had in their plants or receivables we had against claimants. We let claimants have materials at the price that we felt was a fair market price, no more and no less. We have used in cash of our $50,000,000 fund for settlements of contractors claims $8,805,121.99. That is all we have used of the $50,000,000. I believe that we will settle all the claims—of course, some of the later claims might require a higher percentage or might not have so much material involved—for $20,000,000, including all of these types of claims.

So that there is still on hand a considerable amount of the appropriation last year of $50,000,000 for the settlement of claims, and a balance of some $42,000,000, less what is required to settle the remaining claims, estimated at $12,000,000; so that that will leave a balance on hand something like $30,000,000.

On the next page Mr. Lasker said:

Mr. WOOD. Then you have a balance, and out of that balance you say about $20,000,000 will be required?

Mr. LASKER. No. The total of $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 will settle all claims.

Mr. WOOD. That being the difference between $8,800,000 and $25,000,000?

Mr. LASKER. No. There was $5,000,000 we paid out in the United States Mail Line settlement. I testified to that last year. But whether that comes out of the operating fund or this claim has not been fully decided.

Mr. WOOD. What do you mean with reference to any allowance that may be made by this appropriation?

Mr. LASKER. I believe the other $55,000,000 of claims pending that have still to be settled will require $12,000,000 of cash at the outside.

So there would appear to be a reduction of $12,242,000, leaving $30,000,000 on hand out of the previous appropriation of $50,000,000 for the settlement of claims.

In the statement which Mr. Lasker proceeded to make, at page 262, he referred to a letter written on November 24 last as furnishing the details which he desired to submit to the committee. In that letter it is said:

You will note that the total loss—without, of course, taking into account anything for capital charges, to wit, interest, insurance, or depreciation—amounts to $13,058,593.37—for the four months of July, August, September, and October. Then the letter goes on to say:

Out of this, however, there is a general and administrative expense not directly applicable to operation of vessels of $2,197,513.24 for the period.

In other words, they set up a loss from operations for those four months of $13,058,593.37, and then say that $2,197,513.24 has nothing to do with the loss in operation. The loss in operations for July, 1922, as given in this statement, was $2,242,714.14; in August, $2,262,728.62; in September, $3,140,860.53; in October, $2,814,776.84, making a total of $10,861,080.13. That was for four months, given as indicating what their operating losses will probably amount to for the next year. That is less than $3,000,000 a month, and still they put out a statement that the loss from operation is something like $50,000,000 a year. On page 263 it is said:

Our total loss of the Shipping Board has been $13,058,593.37 for the first four months.

Whereas they had just said, as found on the opposite page, that included in that is $2,197,513.24, which covers general and administrative expenses not directly applicable to operation of vessels, contradicting the statement that the losses have amounted to $13,058,000 for those four months, because, according to their own showing, they have not amounted to more than $10,861,080 for those four months. So $50,000,000, estimated for covering losses from operation, is an excessive estimate. According to their own showing, the losses are less than $3,000,000 a month, and have been less than that during this period when rates were lowest, during the period when they had ships tied up in quantities never before exceeded, and during the period when their earnings have been the lowest ever reached, and during a period when ships were tied up all over the world—in England, in Italy, in France, in Norway, everywhere ships have been tied up, and when shipping was fairly dragging the bottom. It is not unreasonable to suppose that their losses for the next 12 months will exceed the losses for the previous 12 months.

In this statement, referring to these ships, Mr. Lasker further said:

They cost $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 each and are worth only a fraction of that because most of the money went into changes. They were originally built for troop ships. Then they were changed to cattle ships and then to refrigerator ships and then to hospital ships and finally to combination passenger and cargo ships. The ships as they come in have been costing $25,000 or $35,000 for voyage repairs.

The repair cost is the great drawback to this enterprise. That item and the stupendous overhead have been the scuttling factors. As Mr. Lasker admits, it is utterly absurd to say that upon the termination of every voyage a ship must go to a repair yard, and there must be spent from twenty-five to thirty-five thousand dollars on that ship for repairs. It is unreasonable. No shipping concern in the world could succeed with such unnecessary expenditures. The repair yards are the bloodsuckers of shipping. They will simply take the life out of shipping if they are allowed their own way with reference to repair expenses. In one instance the Shipping Board boasts of having reduced the number of seamen, and having reduced the wages, and all that sort of thing. I doubt very much if that is any real economy. If they had able seamen on these ships in sufficient number, and officers sufficiently qualified, much of this repair work would be wholly unnecessary, because the crew would take care of the ship.

I venture to say any foreign operator would be looking after his ship through his own men on board that ship, so that it would be a rare thing, probably once a year, that a ship would be required to go to any dock for repairs. But if you have cheap men on board your ship, drawing low pay, and not qualified as able seamen, you can not keep the ship in repair. Consequently, when a ship returns from a voyage, the first thing done is to put her in a repair yard and spend $25,000 or $30,000 on her.

In that connection I might refer to a little item which appeared in the News on January 2, 1923. It is as follows:

WHO GETS THE SUBSIDY?

A sailor friend of ours writes to give us some first-hand information on the Lasker ship subsidy, as it looks to him, from the vantage point of his bunk on the rolling seas. Says he:

"Much of the argument for the Lasker bill is based on the belief that the subsidy is necessary because of high wages paid to American seamen. The people have been told this with a straight face, and they believe it, since they are entirely ignorant of what goes on at sea.

"The truth is that there are not enough Americans left on the sea for us to worry about one way or the other. As a typical example, take my ship, running in passenger and freight service between two American ports.

"The ship has a crew of approximately 150 men. The officers are white, with one exception. There are 8 petty officers who are Americans and 9 who are Mexicans and South Americans. Out of the remaining number all of them belong to the Asiatic or Mexican races, with three exceptions. Of these three white men in the crew proper one is a citizen of Holland. The remaining two are American citizens and draw a wage of $40 per month.

"The American people are told that they must subsidize this ship in order to pay these two men $40 a month—and they believe it!"

The absence of sufficient crews of American seamen, properly skilled and trained, in my judgment accounts very largely for the terrific repair expenses charged up as operating expenses against these ships.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think one of the contributing causes to the very high costs of repair work is the fact, as the Senator has clearly indicated, that outside of the operation, or rather, perhaps, as a part of it, in a sense, there are subsidiary organizations which undertake the repair work, and it is to the interest of the manager, or the man who has the MO–4 contract, to have the repairs made, because he is interested in some subsidiary organization which makes the repairs. My attention has been directed by persons who are familiar with the operations of these ships to the fact that they have refrained from making repairs upon shipboard which could have been made. There seemed to have been some admonition that they should not be made there, notwithstanding they could have been readily made, and when the ship came back to harbor it was put into a dry dock for inconsequential repairs which could have been made during passage. The result was, of course, that an enormous bill was run up, upon which those persons having the contracts made great profits.

My attention was directed to one case where, after the ship came to harbor, the captain called attention to some needed repair of the rudder, which could have been made very cheaply. The order was given that the ship be stopped. The captain protested, but, notwithstanding his protest and his indication that he could repair it at a very small cost, the order was continued; but, rather in defiance of the order, he rigged up some sort of a contrivance which dropped over the stern of the boat, and raised the stern and lowered the bow by adjustng the freight, and in a very short time made the repair.

The plan was to put that ship into dry dock or upon the docks and repair it at a cost of thousands of dollars, perhaps tens of thousands. The Government has been a victim of these conspiracies, which seem to have been connived at by some of the agencies connected with the Shipping Board, which have resulted in these enormous expenses which the taxpayers have had to meet.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the Senator's observation is well founded. Information comes to me, which I scarcely dare to report here, about the robbery that has been taking place under the guise of repairs to ships. I expect to allude to that more extensively hereafter. It is a little beside the particular point now, and I shall ask to put in the RECORD a statement of Mr. Furuseth showing the effect of the reduction of the crews, of the lowering of the standards, and of the decrease in the wages in our merchant marine. There is no economy effected by that, as his statement will show, but, on the other hand, that is largely responsible for these enormous costs and expenditures in the repair yards.

The point is, further, that it is not fair, it is not accurate, to charge against ship operation these tremendous repair bills. I may say this: That information has also reached me to the effect that the Shipping Board is now establishing some reforms in that connection and authorizing all these private operators to look more carefully after their ships and keep them up, and they are watching the costs and expenses in connection therewith.

In my judgment, that will cause a very considerable reduction in the item of repairs, because they can then hold responsible the men who have charge of the operation of the ships, and, watching carefully those expenditures, they will be able, I am quite sure, to effect some important economies.

At page 264 Mr. Lasker said:

The first estimates that have come in for these passenger ships and some cargo ships that need repairs are about $4,800,000, instead of the $3,000,000 that this letter covers.

He was referring to the letter from which I have quoted.

Again, on page 265, he was asked:

Mr. WOOD. My only purpose in getting this information of the cost of repairs is because of the fact that it ought to be at hand for anybody who wants to either criticize or approve.

Mr. LASKER. We are only showing what it costs to operate this year, so that you can see the things that arise and that can arise next year.

They have no business to charge to operating expenses the reconditioning charges, the structural changes which they propose making and have been making in the ships, rebuilding them, changing them from one type to another type, but it appears that has been done, and just in that way the item of "loss in operation" has been made so high. Even under that plan, however, the losses have not exceeded the $3,000,000 per month average.

Mr. LASKER. You understand that after every trip a ship makes there are voyage repairs necessary.

I submit it is inconceivable that after every trip they must have repairs. The crew on the ship ought to keep it up except, perhaps, once or twice a year, when it needs to go into dry dock.

Mr. DIAL. The cost of reconditioning ought to go to the cost of the plant, ought it not?

Mr. FLETCHER. Why, of course. It should be charged to capital account. It means investment, not upkeep. Mr. Lasker said further:

Since this letter of November 24 was written we have authorized $1,500,000 or $1,800,000 for the United States Lines for improvements to ships.

"Improvements to ships," and yet that is charged up against operation.

In this letter, written one month ago, we estimated that $3,000,000 would be what would be required during the balance of this fiscal year for extraordinary ship repairs. It looks now as if it will be nearer to $6,000,000 all told.

The repairs to ships we then had in mind amounted to $3,000,000, but the estimate now is $4,800,000, because added needs have been disclosed.

Of course, there are not mere repairs. These are reconditioning, structural changes in the ships. It is not proper and it is not accurate to estimate the loss to operation to include such expenses.

Referring to the United States Line, Mr. Lasker said:

We will then have operating by next spring the Leviathan, a super-first-class ship; the George Washington, as a fine first-class ship; the America and the President Grant, which, now that we plan to put it in service, we have renamed the President Buchanan, as one-cabin ships, which we believe will be the two best one-cabin ships on any ocean in the world, two of the 535-foot-type vessels and five of the 502-foot-type vessels; 11 ships in all.

That is a very good showing, it seems to me. Why get weary of well-doing? If they are about to establish a line composed of the finest ships afloat, a successful line, operating successfully under our flag, American owned, serving American commerce, why scrap that line and dispose of ships of that character at a nominal price and pay people to operate them?

Then Mr. Lasker spoke about some other changes that would be necessary. On page 267 he referred to the Agamemnon and the Mount Vernon, the ex-German ships—and, by the way, they are over 20 years old. They ought not to be held for that line. They could serve in the Pacific coast trade, but they are not adapted to trans-Atlantic trade and ought not to be there. They necessarily cause a loss, because no one could operate them in that particular trade successfully and make a profit on them. They propose to change those by making a different type, and that would cost between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. Mr. Lasker said:

I am now trying only to give you a forecast of the moneys that might be needed for next year and how the needs may arise.

Again he repeated from that statement on page 268:

Our loss for the first four months, including $2,197,513.24 for expenses not directly applicable to operation, was $13,058,000.

Why put it in? Why charge it to operation? Why say that it is a part of the operating loss when upon the very face of the statement they admit that the item of $2,197,513.24 refers to expenses not directly applicable to operation?

Then follows this statement:

Of course, in this loss is included the general and administrative expense not directly applicable to operation of vessels.

And yet they keep repeating that the loss from operation was thirteen-odd million dollars and then following it with a statement that that involves $2,197,000 that does not belong under that head at all.

Some one introduced a resolution or petition a few days ago appealing to the board to consider the use in the tramp service of some of these ships which are now tied up. It is perfectly well known that the tramp is the cargo carrier of the world. On page 269 Mr. Lasker said:

But we are not dealing here with the tramp-ship problem, because the Shipping Board only operates liners.

It seems they neglect entirely the tramp service. They are not endeavoring to put any of their ships to use as tramps.

Mr. LASKER. All ships have by far a greater cargo going over, away from here. The proportion is about 3 to 1.

Then he was asked:

Mr. DICKINSON. Is your outgoing cargo sufficient to pay expenses?

Mr. LASKER. You mean on our ships?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. LASKER. Oh, I would say that if we had incoming cargoes always as great as our outgoing cargoes our picture would be quite different.

We expect the time to come when the incoming cargoes will increase. We scarcely believe that the present situation of acute depression in that direction will continue indefinitely. We have no reason for expecting that, and he admits, in effect, that if we could get reasonable incoming cargoes our ships would be upon a profitable basis.

At page 271 is this interesting statement:

Now, let me say in justice to those in the Emergency Fleet Corporation and in the Shipping Board other than myself that the operations of the Shipping Board, the economies that have been put in, and the order that has been brought out of confusion is the wonder and amazement of shipping men the world over. What I have to say has no reflection upon myself, save as I happen to be associated with those men, and therefore no men of good taste should turn it upon me. I believe that the operation of the present Shipping Board is the best operation ever made by any business department of the Government.

Of course, the question naturally arises, if you come to praise, why try to bury the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation? There is an old saying that no sound is more pleasing than the sound of one's own praises. No doubt the gentlemen connected with the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board would feel very much like exclaiming that "approbation from Sir Hubert Stanley is praise indeed." It is an old saying that we praise only to be praised. Horace says "Praise undeserved is scandal in disguise." I do not pretend to say that this praise is undeserved. I think they have made very considerable progress in the direction of effecting economies, but my question is, Why get weary of well doing? Why, since they have attained this high state of efficiency, do they propose to stand aside and almost give away the ships and pay somebody else to operate them?

If they have accomplished so much that they can justly say that they have reached a point, as far as efficiency is concerned, which is the amazement of shipping men the world over, it seems to me they must be making very considerable progress and demonstrating what we have been claiming, that there is no need for the losses which they shout from the housetops on every occasion, and no need for being discouraged in the outlook, so far as our shipping is concerned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am interested in the statement the Senator just read from the testimony of Mr. Lasker, in which he delivers a panegyric upon the board, if not himself. I have talked with a number of persons familiar with shipping, and the information which I have is that the Shipping Board is practicing no particular economies, that whatever economies result or whatever reductions have been brought about during the past year since Mr. Lasker's régime have resulted from the discontinuance of a large number of ships which heretofore sailed the Seven Seas. They have tied up hundreds of these ships which heretofore sailed. I am not justifying the fact that they were heretofore used upon the ocean. I think they ought not to have been used. But as they have tied them up, necessarily the overhead expenses would be diminished.

As I read Mr. Lasker's testimony, he accounts for the reduction in the expenses for the coming year from something like $13,000,000 plus to $8,000,000 plus, because there have been a large number of ships withdrawn from sea service. I have read as best I could the testimony which was given before the House committee on the ship subsidy bill. I have read all that Mr. Lasker has said in the volume which the Senator now has in his hand, being the testimony before the House committee upon the pending bill. I have availed myself of all the information I could obtain in order to ascertain just what the situation of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation was, but I confess I can see no economies.

The MO–4 contract is still in force; the same old methods which heretofore were employed still persist; and if the Senator from Florida knows of any economies effected or any plans adopted which have improved the service, I should be very glad to have him point them out.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am giving this compliment which Mr. Lasker pays to the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation full weight, and referring to his own testimony in that connection. That is the only proof that I can furnish the Senator from Utah on that point. Mr. Lasker further gives himself a good name by saying:

In the face of the way the fleet had deteriorated and the decline of freight rates if it had not been for this particular Shipping Board, and particularly in its operations through the Emergency Fleet Corporation, instead of the present Shipping Board having cut a loss of from $11,000,000 to $16,000,000 a month down to $4,000,000 a month and still keep the routes going, the losses would have been kept up, and probably increased.

Of course, they ought to reduce these expenses. Just before Mr. Lasker went into office the Shipping Board was engaged in enormous activities calling for tremendous expenditures, involving the keeping of one set of books, separate and apart from the Fleet Corporation. Then there was also the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which had two divisions; one a construction division, requiring a set of books to be kept upon certain lines, which had to account for the appropriations actually made and for expenditures under such appropriations, and the other a separate division which had to keep another set of books showing a profit-and-loss account, and showing earnings, receipts, and expenditures in connection with operation. It was a cumbersome sort of system, although necessary; which no doubt accounts partly for the condition in which Mr. Lasker found the books of the preceding Shipping Board, which he has stated had to be brought down to date, that no balance could be struck from them, and so forth.

While the operating division was conducting its activities ships were being transferred from the War Department and the Navy Department and from the Emergency Fleet Corporation to those departments, back and forth, so that it was almost impossible to keep voyage accounts and to record the actual outgo and income from the transactions in connection with the operation of the ships. When Mr. Lasker assumed control, or very soon after that, construction work entirely ceased. There have been therefore only two things to be looked after; one the ordinary affairs of the Shipping Board, the disposal of material, the adjusting of accounts and claims, and that sort of thing, and general supervision; the other, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, having to do solely with the operation of the ships. Of course, economies could be effectuated under those circumstances; there was necessarily a reduction of work all along the line, and there ought to have been a reduction of expenditures. It would have been an outrageous thing to have continued the enormous expenditures which had been necessary under the old board and not to have made such reductions.

In connection with the hearings, Mr. Lasker further says:

It takes some time to compile statistics of this sort. I will take the total period. In the 1921 period we had 1,072 terminations of voyages and in the 1922 period we had 847 terminations.

Showing that, of course, they did lay off ships, and that reduced their expenses. He continues:

Terminations mean voyages that have been concluded. Some may have been around-the-world voyages and some may have been voyages that were near by—to the Caribbean, for instance. That is the way ship accountancy is kept. We carried a total of 5,273,897 tons in that period last year and 5,195,932 tons this year. All shipping men know that the world's tonnage carried in that period this year compared with last year has shockingly dropped.

Under the head of "Freight revenues," Mr. Lasker further states:

Now, I will take freight revenue, 1921, as against 1922. Last April it was $16,777,000. This April it was $5,978,000. Mark you, we did not get our freights by cutting the rates. Last year we charged the going rate and this year we charged the going rate. The amount of cargo offered makes the rate.

Again, he was asked by—

Mr. WOOD. Have you ever figured out your net loss per ton in carrying freight?

Mr. LASKER. Yes; on every ship and on every route. They never did it before in any other shipping board. This Shipping Board is the first one to have it. I will say that Mr. Smull, who is the president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and a large staff are obliged to devote a large part of their time studying those returns.

They ought to be able to state voyage accounts, for we know—at least, it is current rumor, and I do not think there can be any dispute about it—that the present Shipping Board has paid Mr. Robert Montgomery's accounting firm—Lybrand, Ross & Montgomery—$1,500,000 in fees. That is quite a tidy sum to pay in order to enable them to state balances, to keep up their books, and to adjust their accounts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Florida that, in addition to that, there are literally hundreds of men who are denominated accountants and experts who are in the service of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and of the Shipping Board. They have had Mr. Tweedale and other competent men there, and they have pretended to balance, and doubtless have balanced, their accounts and made computations. They have had a very large force of competent men in this agency for the purpose of enabling them to make such computations as were necessary in order to determine the losses and profits, and so forth, of the business.

Mr. FLETCHER. They have had them, it seems to me, an unreasonable length of time. These people were supposed to have performed that service and to have been away from there months ago.

Further, with reference to the freight revenues, Mr. Lasker stated:

Now, the average revenues per ton last year as against this year were as follows: The average revenues per ton per ship in April last year was $16.64 per ton as against $7.47 this year. In May last year it was $13.49 as against $7.43 this year. In June last year it was $12.88 as against $9.67 this year. In July last year it was $10.58 as against $7.18 this year. In August last year it was $10.19 as against $6.68 this year. In September last year it was $12.74 as against $5.45 this year. The average last year during the period that we have covered was $12.74 for every ton of freight carried as against an average this year of $7.17.

The tremendous dropping in freight rates accounts for some of the loss in operation, but is that any reason why we should, when that happens, immediately throw up our hands and say, "We have to dispose of these ships right away in order to stop this loss"?

As to passenger revenues, Mr. Lasker states:

Now, the passenger revenues last year in April were $332,036.92, as against $1,183,619.88 this year. In May last year it was $645,549.31, as against $2,467,263.69 this year. In June last year it was $352,-903.05, as against $1,857,024.39 this year—

Showing that the passenger revenues have enormously increased—

In July last year it was $742,080.26, as against $1,656,694.20 this year. In August last year it was $585,168.15, as against $2,131,675.75 this year. In September last year it was $868,455.14, as against $1,527,-164.17 this year, constituting passenger revenue for the six-month period, which includes the very best months of the year in both cases, of $3,526,192.83 last year, as against $10,823,442.08 this year, which is practically entirely accountable through the United States Lines.

That is the only Government-owned and Government-operated line we have to-day, except the Panama Steamship Line. Mr. Lasker says further:

After I was broken into office in September I seized these ships from these people—

That is, the United States Mail Line—because they paid no charter hire, and after that we ran them ourselves. This year during that same period the gross receipts were a little better than a million dollars a month. That does not count expenses; that does not mean net—

And so forth.

Then Mr. Lasker discusses the revenue derived from tankers and shows a tremendous reduction in the revenues from such vessels, and a consequent operating loss. Then he says:

Therefore, gentlemen, on the same amount of freight carried in the measurable period this year—and both years we charged the going rates throughout the world—we received $26,000,000 less this year than last year. The loss last year of the Shipping Board for that six months' period was, in round figures, as near as can be ascertained from the books, about $48,000,000, and the loss for the same period this year——

Mr. WOOD. What period of time does that cover?

Mr. LASKER. From April last year to September last year—that is, three months under the old board and three months under the new board. The loss under the present Shipping Board for the same months this year was, as testimony showed, in operations alone, $11,000,000. Therefore we operated during the period this year on $37,000,000 less loss—remember, gentlemen, we could not get operations under perfect control during our first three months in office last year—on $37,000,000 less loss as against the period of last year, and we took in for the same amount of freight $26,000,000 less money. Therefore when you figure that we carried the same amount of freight for $37,000,000 less loss in operations and took in $26,000,000 less money in gross receipts, it means $63,000,000 greater efficiency in the operations of the board this year as against the previous period, or a little over $10,000,000 a month.

Then, why come to Congress now and ask that $50,000,000 be appropriated for the next year to cover this character of expenses? The showing made throughout by the Shipping Board itself, by the statements of its officials and their own experts, is that they have never suffered during the period which they have mentioned a loss of over $3,000,000 a month, and in that were included a number of items for repairs and reconditioning. Yet they persist in talking about $50,000,000 a month as the loss to the people of this country every year from operating these ships. Their own statements show that the losses aggregate no such amount at all. So I submit that $30,000,000 is sufficient to cover these items, and that this bill ought to carry, instead of $50,000,000, only $30,000,000 in the clause for the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

At page 276 of the hearings we find under the head of "Liquidation of assets"—and this will answer, I think, one of the questions asked by the Senator from Utah a moment ago—Mr. Lasker says:

Mr. WOOD. Will you not give us an idea as to what ships and properties remain still to be liquidated?

Mr. LASKER. First, let me give you our situation as regards our ships. On November 30, 1922, we had a total of 1,399 steel ships, with a total dead-weight tonnage of 9,813,146, made up as follows:

	Number.	Dead-weight tonnage.
Cargo	1,230	8,457,474
Passenger and transports	48	528,523
Tankers	79	726,241
Refrigerator	14	100,908
Tugs	28	.....
Total	1,399	9,813,146

In addition to the steel ships there remained on hand on that date 26 vessels other than steel, with a total dead-weight tonnage of 74,921, divided as follows:

	Number.	Dead-weight tonnage.
Wood cargo [1]	4	16,485
Composite cargo [1]	1	3,575
Concrete cargo	2	6,078
Concrete tankers	7	48,783
Wood tug hulls	1	.....
Wood harbor tugs	11	.....
Total	26	74,921

[1] The five wood and composite cargo ships were not included in the recent sale of similar vessels as they will have to be surrendered to United States courts to satisfy libels.

Last year in our testimony we indicated that the surplus materials taken over by the present board would be essentially liquidated by the end of the present calendar year, and that we would obtain not less than $12,000,000 by its disposal. I can now say that this has been accomplished; that we have recovered somewhat in excess of $13,000,000; and there remains to be disposed of material that will bring not more than about $75,000, made up of equipment previously required for the use of our personnel in the field.

So that they have had that much coming in from the disposition of the surplus material. He refers to the MO-4 contract, and refers also to the claims commission. He says that they have dispensed with the services of that commission. It was organized at their request in order to adjust these claims; and now, I believe, the Shipping Board has taken over the whole subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator has directed attention to the amount received last year from the sale of property—the liquidation of assets, to use the expression of Mr. Lasker. I suppose the amount received from the sale of property went into the fund available to meet the expenses of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and that $12,000,000 or $13,000,000—whatever it was—has been expended. Does the Senator know in regard to that?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not say as to that. It is rather difficult to say just where that has gone. It has been received. I take it that it has gone into the funds of the Shipping Board, of course, and it is probably included in this total amount which they have to their credit in the Treasury.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that ships were sold to the amount of more than $239,000,000, and that at the end of the war, in addition to the ships which were sold there were tens if not hundreds of millions of dollars of property in the hands of the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation other than the ships. My information at that time and subsequently was that the Government of the United States or the Shipping Board would derive several hundred millions of dollars from the sale of this surplus personal property and houses and real estate. Does the Senator know how much actually has been received, and does the Senator know what has been done with it?

Mr. FLETCHER. The statement shows that they expect to make settlements with reference to dry docks, and so forth. Mr. Lasker says, on page 277:

These settlements will bring in an additional amount of approximately $1,750,000.

As to what has been received, the various sources from which it has been received, and what has been done with it, the statements do not show. The statement, at page 307, shows the amount of the unexpended balance and the amount of appropriations and the total amount received as $146,797,847.69 up to November 30, 1922. Included in those items are "all other receipts not otherwise classified, $171,363.28"; but whether that includes some of the proceeds from these sales or disposition of material, there is not anything to show in the statement, and there is nothing in the hearings, so far as I can see, that refers specifically to that.

Mr. KING. It would seem to indicate, then, that the situation is substantially this: The Government appropriated directly three billion four hundred and eighty-eight million five hundred and forty-one thousand dollars plus to the Emergency Fleet Corporation and to the Shipping Board. Practically all of the surplus property, real estate, and personal property has been disposed of, and the proceeds derived therefrom consumed by the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation; so that all that we have to show for the three billion four hundred and eighty-eight million dollars plus is 1,064 or 1,069 boats, one-third of which are practically valueless, tied up at the docks, characterized as useless. Indeed, some of the testimony indicates that it would be profitable to tow them out into the ocean and sink them. We have a number of fairly good ships. We could sell all of the ships, perhaps, for $100,000,000—possibly a little more, probably a little less—so that for our investment of $3,488,000,000 we would bring to the Government of the United States, if we should dispose of the ships, if we could sell them at all, perhaps, $100,000,000. Now, we propose to appropriate $50,000,000 more to waste upon this property that is not worth more than $100,000,000.

Mr. President, the people are long-suffering, and the patience of Congress and its apathy are to me perfectly astounding. We have sat here for years, growling now and then about the misconduct, extravagance, and waste of the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation, and as often as the appropriation bills come up we add to the appropriations and respond to the insatiable demands of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Oliver Twist is not in it, measured by the demands of the Shipping Board. It is more and still more from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. I believe the statement of the Senator from Utah is practically correct. We did appropriate and spend $3,400,000,000 for these ships, and it is a fact that we have something over a thousand left, a third of which are almost valueless. I doubt if we could sell them at this time for any price. We have some 700 or 800 left that have some value, quite a number of them of considerable value. I do not know just what they would bring, whether they would bring $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, but I am quite certain that the amount they would bring if offered at public auction to-day would be immeasurably less than they cost.

I submit, Mr. President, that these different Shipping Boards are not wholly to blame—this one or any other, in fact. Congress itself, it seems to me, is to blame to a great degree. We permitted them to go on with their policy of building ships.

If the Senator from Florida will permit me just to proceed a moment or two; I wonder if the Senator from Utah has the figures or if he has ever seen the figures which indicate that the keels of about 5,000,000 tons of steel shipping were laid down before the armistice, and nearly 5,800,000 tons of steel ships after the armistice. I do not mean launched; I mean actually started. We permitted that policy to continue. We voted for those things. We should have had some knowledge of them. I believe it was wrong. I said at the time it was wrong. I felt that it was pursuing a policy which some day would come back upon us to demonstrate clearly the lack of foresight upon our part; but we did it, we authorized the expenditure of the money, and now, only a year or two ago, one day the Shipping Board came in through the last head of that board, Judge Payne; he submitted to the Committee on Commerce a proposition that he could sell the Leviathan and get $3,000,000 of good American money for her.

Mr. KING. And he could have sold a certain number for $29,000,000.

Mr. CALDER. Yes; and he could have sold the Leviathan for $3,000,000. Why, Congress became most indignant over the idea that we were going to dispose of that splendid American ship to private parties; and what happened? We did not get the $3,000,000, and we are spending about $9,000,000 to recondition her, and we shall have her as our super passenger vessel in the North Atlantic trade, and we might just as well have had her in that trade and the Government be $12,000,000 in pocket; and so on all down the line.

I am of the opinion that this Shipping Board has done as well as any other governmental functionary could be expected to do. I observed that the Senator from Utah laughs, and perhaps with some reason.

Mr. KING. No; if the Senator will pardon me, I was not laughing at the statement that they had done good work, but at the statement that they had done as well as any Government functionary could be expected to do. That, I think, is an indication that a Government functionary is not expected to do very well.

Mr. CALDER. A Government functionary in a business of this character can not compete with private business. The Senator knows that. He has always urged that.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. That is the difficulty. My judgment is that we have got to do one of three things with these ships. Either we have got to pass a subsidy bill and give them Government aid, or else continue the policy of operating them until we consume them, as the Senator from Utah suggests, until they are all eaten up, paying the cost of operating in the meanwhile, or else we have got to put them up at auction and let any one take them that wants them at the price he will give, and then let the Government of the United States go out of the business of having an oversea traffic in its own vessels.

I have been wondering very often if the American people are going to be able, under any circumstances, to compete with foreign nations in oversea trade. That is the thing that bothers me, and I know that it concerns other Senators. I know that the Senator from Florida has given as much careful thought to it as any man in this body. He has labored with it. He has been most faithful in his effort to do what is best to solve the problem. Upon my word, standing here and addressing the Senate, I do not know what to do. I have felt that the subsidy was the best way out. Are we going to continue forever appropriating $50,000,000 or $30,000,000 a year and have it eaten up?

I have in my hand a letter—I trust the Senator will permit me to continue for a moment—from a gentleman who knows the shipping business, who has made an analysis of some of the statements concerning the United States lines. He deals with the very subject the Senator has discussed—the question of reconditioning and repairs—and says, "Yes; you might say these ought to be capital charges, but, at any rate, the United States Government is paying all this money. It comes out of the Treasury." He points out that in five months last year we spent $945,000 for maintenance and repairs to the vessels of the United States lines, and Mr. Rossbottom claims that should not be charged to operation. It must be charged to something. It was paid out of the funds of the American people. Then he goes on to say, as the Senator has indicated, that if this had been done by some concern operating the vessels privately it could have been done for half the cost. The Government seemingly can not do these things as cheaply as private concerns can. That is the difficulty. Some day we are going to get sick and tired of appropriating money for this purpose; and we had better give them all up to somebody, if we can not do any better, and stop wasting the public money on them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to deal at some length with what the Senator has said; but it rather diverts me from what I have in mind now and from what would be really pertinent to the motion which I have made, and I would rather not go into those details just at this time. I shall have something to say about that a little later on; but, with reference to Government operation, while I think eventually these ships ought to go into private hands, I submit that there need not be any great haste about putting them there and we need not give them away, and we need not go down into the Treasury of the United States to pay people to operate them.

The time for any reasonable business man to dispose of any property he has is not when everything is depressed and there are no buyers. He must hold that property until things get into shape again, until there is demand, until business develops, and until his property has an actual value on the market, which these ships have not to-day. That time will come. The Shipping Board will proceed to establish these new routes and develop these new services and encourage trade and commerce in these various directions where they are operating to-day, take care of our commerce at fair rates; and eventually there will be people who will want that business and will want the ships engaged in it. That will be the time for the Government to realize on its ships.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that in the Committee on Commerce, of which he was the very able chairman a year or two ago, we discussed these things with members of the Shipping Board and they stated a year or two ago that they could sell that tonnage for $100 a ton, or a little over $100, as I recall it, and while we passed no resolution in our committee, it was the unrecorded sentiment that we might better keep the ships. We lost our opportunity then. We could have sold many of those ships then to private enterprises, but we discouraged it, and we are responsible for it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is very largely correct in fixing the responsibility, so far as that phase of the matter is concerned, on Congress. We finally reached the conclusion that the merchant marine act of 1920 meant the establishment of a fixed policy which ought to be carried out.

Mr. CALDER. It seemed to me, and to the Senator, that it was at that time; but it has not worked out for the benefit of those people.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. I want to read, in that connection, something which was printed in the Evening Star a few days ago, as follows:

Points to lesson in Panama Canal. Col. Jay J. Morrow declares operation is proof of governmental efficiency.

Colonel Morrow said in his report:

The Panama Railroad and Steamship Line are auxiliary and necessary functions of the canal, as much so now for successful operation as they were for construction; they have paid their way most handsomely, and will doubtless continue to do so when the depression of the last two years clears up.

The canal and the community connected with it are the finest expressions of American thoroughness and efficiency. The wonderful spirit of the construction force manifested in bringing to fulfillment this dream of the centuries still lives with the operating force after the great task is done.

Presidents, Secretaries of War, and Congresses have stood firm against attempts to change the wise plan devised for government and operation of the canal, which is now highly centralized in the governor under the Secretary of War. We are giving proof that the Government can and does successfully operate big business, and can continue to do so, if the executive and legislative branches of our National Government will insist (as they have done) that the operation be kept free of improper political influences and are not hampered by unnecessary legal restrictions.

I think that is absolutely sound; I agree with it fully. Not only does the Canal Zone itself illustrate and demonstrate what Governor Morrow has said, but the Panama Steamship Line, part of that operation, has been most successful, having a deficit only 2 years out of 20, when they carried Government employees and supplies at Government rates, which would have been almost double if they had charged commercial rates. They have kept down the freight rates to the whole Caribbean and to the west coast of South America, and still have been earning a profit every year for 20 years, except in those two years, and in those the deficits would have been merely nominal if we had permitted them to charge commercial rates on traffic which they carried. I will dwell upon that a little later, when we come to the ship subsidy bill, if we ever take it up again.

Mr. Lasker further said, as reported on page 289:

The $50,000,000 we ask for next year only equals from $38,000,000 to $40,000,000 appropriations for this year, because our agents have always had from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 working capital on hand. So when you gave us $50,000,000 this year—that was $50,000,000 plus $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 working capital that our agents had on deposits. We are proposing to turn all that money back at the end of this year including our working capita which is not available for operations, so that next year when we ask you for $50,000,000 we are asking for $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 less than this year.

They did not use the $50,000,000 we gave them last year or the $50,000,000 plus the $10,000,000 or the $12,000,000. Why should we give them $50,000,000 this year? I further find, on page 291:

Mr. WOOD. Now, if the ship subsidy bill passes and we sell these to operating companies, they will not require all of that, will they?

Mr. LASKER. These are structural changes that have to be made immediately this year.

To which I referred this morning. That is with reference to those ships of the United States Lines. I read further:

Mr. WOOD. Suppose the ship subsidy bill should pass the Senate and should be signed by the President next week or within 10 days, would all the expense in structural changes for which you ask an appropriation be necessary?

Mr. LASKER. Yes, sir; because when you sell ships you get into transactions of millions of dollars. In other words, when the ship subsidy bill passes, presto! the next minute you will not sell the ships like you would sell a pound of sugar. It will take some time to negotiate the sale of ships.

Mr. WOOD. Do you think they would be sold to better advantage or operated to better advantage? Suppose the ship subsidy bill was passed and the matter was passed over, would it be a matter of economic investment for us to go on and make these changes?

Mr. LASKER. Yes; because we would have to operate them long enough ourselves while the negotiations were under way, to justify the repairs, and in that way I think a good share of the money would come back to us. In the second place we do not want to adopt a national policy of aiding private owners on the one hand and on the other hand selling them ships that are so poor that the private owners will become bankrupt.

It is too bad we have to play the part of guardians to these private owners, is it not? Here is a confession that if the ship subsidy bill should be passed all these structural changes must be made anyhow, all these expenses must be incurred anyhow, all this operating loss must be incurred anyhow, because you can not sell the ships for years to come in any event, and even if you sell a part of them, the overhead expenses, as Mr. Lasker states further on in this very statement, would be practically the same, whether you operate 100 ships or 400 ships. So you would have a subsidy of $30,000,000 added to the operating losses you are suffering to-day and added on to these expenses for repairs and structural changes; and we ought to incur these expenses, we ought to put these ships in first-class condition at our expense, because we do not want the individual buyer to acquire a ship on which he may possibly lose money. In addition to that, we want to pay him to operate those ships.

There is one very encouraging thing about this statement. At page 293 Mr. Lasker said:

The overhead pay roll as of June 15, 1921, was $15,861,400. and the overhead pay roll as of this date is $8,956,496. As we complete the liquidation of properties and the settlement of claims we will quickly dispense with workmen who are handling materials in liquidation and with attorneys, accountants, and experts who are negotiating claims settlements.

Fine! That ought to have been done long ago, for that matter, but that is splendid, and I see by the newspapers that certain reductions have been made in the force in New York. I see by the newspapers that reduction was made on Saturday, or just a few days ago, in this division of liquidation of property. That is the right course. That sort of thing ought to have been under way all along, and these expenses could have been reduced before this.

Now they have them down to $8,956,496 a year, and Mr. Lasker says further in this statement:

We will be able to cut the pay roll down to at least $7,500,000 by June 30, 1923. That, we believe, will mark the end of any considerable overhead for liquidation of war activities and will represent about the static overhead of the Shipping Board so far as it operates fleet ships. It must be remembered the overhead is about as large to operate 100 ships as to operate 400 ships or 800 ships. Thus the pay roll will have gone from $15,861,000 when the present board came into office, June 15, 1921, to $7,500,000 by June 30, 1923. This reduction keeps apace with the history of the liquidation of the war entanglements.

Precisely; and the fact that they are able now to put the Shipping Board upon this basis shows that the enterprise can be made successful if they will only set about to do it, and not take pains to make it a failure.

As I have said, we are confined to the House hearings for our information on this subject, but at page 293 of the House hearings Mr. Lasker mentions a fact, not particularly relevant here, but which is well worth while putting into the RECORD, perhaps. He said:

Mr. Chairman, the wooden-ship problem no longer exists. They have all been disposed of during the last year. We held a public auction and disposed of $310,000,000 worth of wooden ships for $7,750,000.

I expect to comment on that perhaps a little later, but just at this time I need not refer to it further. The situation, then, is that the Shipping Board has arrived at a state of efficiency that is the wonder of the shipping world; that they have reduced their expenses down to where there will be an annual overhead of something like $7,500,000 hereafter. The report shows enormous revenues realized from the operation of the ships. I have asked for some information as to the details, routes, and services, for specifications as to where the losses are occurring, and why and when. I hope to get that information after a while. From all this terrible expense of $1,500,000 for accountants it looks as though it ought to be very readily available.

There is, in the statement which I have just quoted from the chairman of the Shipping Board, proof positive that there is no necessity for throwing up our hands here and saying that because we are a great burden on the taxpayers and because the Government can not carry on the business without tremendous loss and because those losses amount to $50,000,000 a year, whereas the figures, the proof, the evidence, show they do not amount to any such sum at all, that therefore we must go out of the business, dismiss the Shipping Board, liquidate the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and turn the ships over at whatever price we can get for them and pay some one to operate them under the American flag. The very statement of the chairman shows the absurdity of the conclusion to which he comes.

There may have been some loss, but, Mr. President, I could refer to the various countries, maritime countries all over the world, and I expect later to do so, and show their experiences during the last year or two. Here is a statement, for instance, in the December 28 number of Fairplay, in which I note the following items:

From a report of the Leeds Shipping Co. (Ltd.), covering 12 months ending August 31, 1922, it would appear there has been a loss of £2,509, and nothing would seem to have been written off for depreciation. This is a small British company operating four steamers of about 8,500 tons dead weight each.

From a report of the Cornborough Shipping Line (Ltd.), covering 12 months ending July 31, 1922, it would seem that a loss has been made of £10,088, nor has anything been set aside for depreciation.

The Llewellyn Shipping Co. (Ltd.), from its report covering 12 months ending June 30, 1922, made a loss of £12,915.

It will be seen, therefore, that British companies have found it difficult to pay expenses during the past year.

British companies have found it difficult to pay expenses during the past year, but have the British people retired from the shipping business?

The American shipping situation and the Shipping Board experience as to losses are not discouraging. In the North American of November 27 a statement appears to the effect that there are 26 ships building in the United States now of a total tonnage of 156,980. I ask that the statement may be appended at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

(See appendix.)

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit, under the showing made by the chairman, considering the actual financial situation of the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation, their assets, obligations, and everything involved, that $30,000,000 would be ample appropriation to be covered in the bill and that the amendment which I have proposed ought to be adopted.

Mr. President, there appeared in the Washington Evening Star of January 16, 1923, an article by Mr. David Lawrence entitled:

Ship subsidy bill in hopeless jam. Plea of southern business men believed to be main salvation. Lasker to quit June 1. Atlantic and Gulf lines discontinued because of great losses.

Mr. Lawrence is a talented, experienced, brilliant writer, correspondent, and news disseminator. He has no purpose, I take it and I assume, to engage in any propaganda for the support of the ship subsidy bill. He had no idea, I presume, that the information which he obtained, and which he sent out through the country by this article, had back of it some ulterior motive or purpose. But I submit that it is a species of propaganda and the culmination of efforts, by publicity and otherwise, which the Shipping Board has been putting forth for months in order to gain support for the ship subsidy bill. Mr. Lawrence had to go to the source of information naturally for the news, and the article shows clearly where that source of information was. He said:

The ship subsidy bill has gotten into such a jam in the Senate that the entire American shipping business is facing an uncertainty bordering on chaos.

About the only hope for the measure lies in the pleas of southern business men, who have been advised that virtually all the South Atlantic and Gulf lines established by the United States Shipping Board must be abandoned immediately after March 4 if the ship subsidy bill isn't passed. There is talk also of the resignation of the entire Shipping Board. If this does not happen, the President will find it necessary to reorganize the board and fill several vacancies.

Chairman A. D. Lasker has told his associates on the board that he will retire on June 1, irrespective of whether the bill passes or not. He has given two years of his time to the problem and is anxious to return to private business.

So that we have here the threat virtually that the South Atlantic and Gulf lines established by the Shipping Board must be abandoned immediately after March 4 if the ship subsidy bill is not passed. Mr. President, it seems to me not a very creditable thing on the part of the Shipping Board to take that position and give out as information to be spread over the country and be published, as it has been published, along the South Atlantic and Gulf coasts, a threat that if the Senators from those States do not vote for the ship subsidy legislation, the ships serving the ports of the Gulf and South Atlantic will be withdrawn from that service after March 4.

At present the Shipping Board vessels are carrying 52 per cent of the commerce moving out of the Atlantic and Gulf ports. The service is on a satisfactory footing, so far as I know or have been able to ascertain. The operators in the South Atlantic and Gulf ports are right up at the top among all the operators under the United States Shipping Board. That commerce is not diminishing but is increasing. There is no occasion to withdraw the ships from those ports. The statement I have quoted is simply intended to influence the commercial bodies, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and merchants along the South Atlantic and Gulf coasts to bring pressure to bear upon their Senators to support the ship subsidy bill, because if they do not they are to understand the ships will be withdrawn from those ports. Is it possible that we have come to that pass when threats of this kind must be resorted to and when promises of immediate benefit are to be offered in order to gain votes for the ship subsidy bill?

I submit that they entirely underestimate the intelligence and the integrity of the people along the Gulf and South Atlantic coasts if they think they can coerce them on the one hand or bribe them on the other. They are people who will respond to reason, to argument. Furnish them, if you will, but I warn you that threat will be resented. There are some people who adopt the very strange and, in my judgment, the wicked, the false, the atrocious philosophy that every man has his price. I disagree wholly and absolutely with that. That sort of philosophy tends to make men fawning sycophants or obsequious parasites, and I have a contempt for both. There is such a thing as principle which will control the judgment and the action of the people who have a proper conception of fiduciary responsibility. This Government was established by men who believed that certain principles should prevail over present interest or loyalty to king. We believe in equality of opportunity and a share in control. We set that up against special privilege and control by class. No threat or promise of present reward will be allowed to influence our adherence to principle.

The United States would never have been born but for that. There is a principle involved in this matter. The question is whether we are now going to establish a permanent policy of ship subsidy in this country or whether we are not. The article further states:

The reason the South Atlantic and Gulf lines are to be abandoned is that they are losing heavily for the Government.

I question that statement, and I advise these gentlemen if they pursue the course as threatened in this article they will have to prove the basis for that action. They will have to furnish books and papers and documents and evidence to the satisfaction of a proper investigating committee that they are withdrawing these vessels in the public interest and not as a punishment to those communities whose representatives here are opposed to the ship subsidy bill. There will be some inquiry about that. I take it, however, that this is simply an idle threat, for I know the losses from operation in the Gulf and South Atlantic are not so serious as this article pretends, not as great comparatively as in the North Atlantic and Pacific, and I know that satisfactory service is being rendered in connection with those lines. The fact that there may be losses here and there, as I have heretofore pointed out, would not justify the Shipping Board, any more than it would a private individual, in immediately withdrawing the vessels from the trade. The people interested have sense enough to inquire, if the Government is losing money in those circumstances, how can they expect the Government to buy those ships and operate them out of those ports at a continuing loss. They have sense enough to know that if the losses are such as to warrant the Government in withdrawing the ships that that means, if the Government goes out of business and the ships are turned over to private operators, they will not continue to operate them from those ports at a loss.

Furthermore, those are cargo ships; and under the ship subsidy bill each of those ships would receive but from $10,000 to $12,000 a year subsidy. That would not cover the necessary cost of the upkeep of the ships; that would be no inducement for a private individual to buy the ships and operate them himself at a loss from those ports. The chief beneficiaries under the subsidy bill are the passenger ships, and the Shipping Board has no passenger ships in the Gulf and South Atlantic. No; it is simply a threat, which is intended to build back fires behind the Senators here who represent those States in order to compel and force them into voting for the subsidy bill. The article continues:

The section most in need of these lines was the South, with its heavy cotton shipments. Without regular lines, cotton growers of the South would be compelled to ship to northern ports and pay the high freight rates.

Neither is that true. If the Shipping Board ships go out of the business, foreign ships will take the place of their ships and cotton will move by water; there need be no fear about that. The article also states:

The Shipping Board's plan of withdrawing southern trade routes is not issued as a threat to southern Senators, but the members of the board feel that enough money already has been spent on these lines and that they would be derelict in their duty if they did not shut off the virtual subsidy which has been granted ships which have been running from these southern ports.

So it is the Shipping Board that feels this way. Hence I say that must necessarily be the source of Mr. Lawrence's information. The board has informed him that unless the ship subsidy bill passes South Atlantic and Gulf ports will be deprived of the ships which are now operating from these ports, for the board feels it would be derelict in its duty if it did not stop the losses which have been occurring there. That is done, as I have stated, to influence the people who are engaged in commerce and trade in those regions to urge their representatives here to support the subsidy measure, whether they consider it sound or not. The article continues:

Some of the ports which will be affected by a change of policy are Wilmington, N. C.; Charleston, S. C.; Savannah and Brunswick, Ga.; Mobile, New Orleans, Galveston, and Jacksonville.

Republican leaders are frank enough to say that a filibuster against the bill between now and March 4 will succeed unless the Democrats completely change their tactics and desert the progressive bloc and others who are keeping the shipping bill from being considered and acted upon by the Senate.

Who has been keeping the ship subsidy bill from being acted upon? The shipping bill has been laid aside at the request of the chairman of the committee to enable the Senate to consider, first, the appropriation bills as they have been brought forward, and then to consider rural credits legislation. We who are opposed to the ship subsidy bill are ready and have been all along to discuss it fully, fairly, openly here at any time that it shall be taken up; but if any excuse may be made for a filibuster, if there is any occasion when it may be resorted to in order to defeat a measure which is wholly vicious and unwise, I submit that in this instance a filibuster would be justifiable. On that subject I present an editorial from the Florida Times-Union, which is entitled "A filibuster legitimate," and ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion and as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. However, there has been no filibuster in connection with the bill, and the naming in the article of prominent ports in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas simply means an intimation on one side that if the subsidy bill shall pass the ships will be continued to be operated from those ports as they have been operated in the past. Neither of the positions set forth in the article would appeal to any man of honor and integrity, and neither of them is in anywise justified or warranted. Plainly and evidently they are put forth in order that pressure may be brought to bear to accomplish results apparently so much desired by Mr. Lasker. He, apparently, aspires to occupy the position described by Pope, when he said:

Like Cato, give his little Senate laws,
And sit attentive to his own applause.

I desire to insert in the RECORD, Mr. President, an article which appears in Collier's Weekly of January 13, 1923, written by Mr. Irving T. Bush, who built the great Bush Terminal in New York City, covering 30 city blocks and equipped for receiving, shipping, storing, and manufacturing goods. Mr. Bush's own interests would be furthered by the growth of the American merchant marine. This gives added significance to what he has to say in this article, entitled, "They look pretty, but do they pay?" I venture to use this article here, believing Mr. Bush will be able to deal with any threat or attempt to punish him for his temerity in opposing subsidy.

Mr. Bush is president of the New York Chamber of Commerce. He has expressed himself in the article with great force and frankness and clearness. I do not agree with all his views; for instance, I do not believe that Government operation is necessarily a failure, or that it is unsound under conditions such as we have been going through and are now going through. In this article I especially wish to call attention to one or two paragraphs. Mr. Bush says, for instance:

After a man has bought an automobile he seldom stops to ask himself if he really needs it. He just goes on trying to find the money to buy gas, tires, and the other things necessary to keep it on the road. Is this the way with our merchant marine? I do not know. I am not arguing a point; I am asking a question. Certainly if we could translate our ships back into the cash they cost, we would make the swap at once. Of course, that can not be done. We have the ships and must face the facts—and they are not pleasant.

* * * * * * *

The present problem is, Shall we keep them going, or had we better sell them and take taxis?

I admire Mr. Harding greatly—

I agree with him in that statement; we are absolutely in accord as to that—

I voted for him—

I part company with Mr. Bush there—and hope to do so again.

Still our paths diverge, but here we come together—

But I can not bring myself to believe that a merchant marine that can be maintained only by a subsidy—by paying out the taxpayers' money to some one to run it—is worth maintaining. * * *

I can not remember any American shipowner cutting rates just because he was an American.

That is another proposition we might as well face.

* * * * * * *

It is the same problem every manufacturer faces. Shall he own a truck or hire one? If it's cheaper to own one, let us own one; but if it costs so much to run an American ship that we must pay some one a bonus to do it, where do we get off with a saving?

* * * * * * *

Therefore a subsidy is but a temporary expedient to build up a merchant marine, but, if undertaken, a permanent policy. Is it likely to be permanent? Would it work easily and smoothly without scandal? Or will some coming Congress catch some shipowner with his thumb in the molasses and kick the whole thing over, and with it all the money we have spent?

This is the language of one of the strongest intellectual forces in this country, a man of patriotism, a man to whose interest it would be to see the subsidy bill passed, so far as that is concerned, but he is conscientious, patriotic, public-spirited, broad minded, and he says:

No very sensible man is going into a business based on a bonus which may be withdrawn at any time. What shall we do? We can not sell the ships; shall we sink them? By no means! We have the ships and have paid our good money for them. It may be that there still remain some not worth keeping at any price, but the fleet has been pretty well pruned. The remainder should be kept until we can sell them to be operated under our flag.

That is exactly what I have been saying. That is precisely where I stand.

This is difficult just now for two reasons—shipping business is bad and we have not yet developed a sufficient number of men who know the shipping business.

That difficulty is met, according to Mr. Lasker, by the supreme degree of efficiency which has been attained in the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

A subsidy will not correct either of these difficulties, but time will. If there is no freight to carry, a bonus will not create it, and experienced operators of ships can come only as men acquire experience. In the end the ships should be sold, for the Government is not a success in business. * * *

The plain fact is that the ships are better at anchor if they are not wanted, and when they are wanted it is better to charter those we now own to Americans without any interest or depreciation—taking a share of net earnings as compensation and leaving to the future the question of new ships.

Precisely the position which I have taken on this subject, and which I stand for to-day.

As time passes, it will develop whether a merchant marine can justify itself under the American flag. If it can not—let us hire our hauling done for us.

I have no doubt on the subject myself, and I believe this: It is better for the Government to have these ships—some ships, at least—to supplement the privately owned ships in carrying our commerce overseas by a sufficient number to serve us in time of any emergency as naval auxiliaries, if that should come, and by a sufficient number to serve our commerce as needed, as it rises or falls, even if it does cost the Government a little money to do that. We have had illustrations of what that means. Last year, when the coal strike was on and the railroads were tied up and we could not get coal, we had to buy coal in England and bring it over here to our own people, although right in sight of us here were millions and millions of tons of coal. What happened? The freight rate on coal was 7 shillings a ton. Immediately the foreign ships put up the rate to 14 shillings a ton, and I presume it would have gone higher yet. Fortunately we were in the position of having a few of our own ships lying tied up, idle, out of service, if you please. We put 83 of them into that business and brought that coal here at less than 9 shillings a ton. That is the kind of service those ships can render the people of this country. Suppose it does cost a little money to keep those ships tied up from time to time?

Then, again, when we appropriated $20,000,000 to send grain to Russia, what happened? Freight rates went up on that grain. We would have been obliged to pay most exorbitant rates in order to deliver the grain. We were in position to go down to the Shipping Board and say, "Let us have some of these idle ships to move that grain at reasonable cost," and that was done.

An enormous amount of money was saved to the people of this country by those two operations. So I say it is no loss even if we have to pay out a reasonable sum to have ready at hand ships that can serve the commerce of this country and the people of this country when the occasion arises, as in the two instances I have mentioned.

At a later time I shall have something further to say on this general subject. At present I submit what I have thus far stated, and believe that $30,000,000 is all that we ought to provide in this bill; that the item of $50,000,00 should be changed to $30,000,000.

I ask that the entire article to which I have referred be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

APPENDIX.

[From the Florida Times-Union, Jacksonville, Fla., Saturday, January 6, 1923.]

A FILIBUSTER LEGITIMATE.

As yet there is no evidence of a filibuster in the Senate against the ship subsidy bill. The appropriations bills that have displaced it were necessary, and they have been passed promptly. Delay is delay, and an attempt to delay the ship subsidy bill could have accomplished the same results if used against one of the supply bills as if against the subsidy bill itself. Not quite 50 days of the session remain, exclusive of Sundays, and if the desire is to prevent a decision on the subsidy bill before the end of the session the taking up of two days on a supply bill instead of one would take out a day as well as if the subsidy bill were considered twice as long as is necessary.

The farm credit bill will displace the subsidy bill and it will take up a reasonable amount of time. The debate on a measure of this kind would occupy a week, or maybe two or three, in the Senate if Senators were only trying to present reasons for or against its passage. If this bill does not get out of the way before the end of this month, the consumption of the time will be no proof of an effort to prevent the passage of the ship subsidy bill. It will only show a commendable desire on the part of Senators to vote intelligently on this bill. The Senate is not in the habit of being hurried.

But the condemnation of a filibuster as a legitimate means of preventing undesirable legislation is absolutely insincere. The men who condemn it when it is being used to prevent the passage of a bill they desire use it to defeat a bill they are opposing. It is so unhesitatingly used by both parties and by individuals that it is strange that anybody will stultify himself by condemning it when it is used in opposition to his desires.

In the present case the use of the filibuster would be an act of patriotism. It would not serve to defeat the will of the people, but would serve to leave the matter in the hands of the men the people elected two months ago instead of those elected two years and two months ago. On patriotic grounds a man may do all in his power to have the most recently expressed will of the people carried out, even if they had previously expressed themselves differently.

While there is about 170 Republican majority in the House of Representatives now, the subsidy bill was passed by a majority of only about 20. More than one-third of the Republicans in the House voted against it. In the House of Representatives recently elected the Republicans will have a majority of only 15. Everyone knows that if the Congress recently elected decides this question the bill will be defeated. It is being pushed now to give a defeated Congress a chance to force it on the people.

TWENTY-SIX SHIPS BUILDING IN UNITED STATES NOVEMBER 1; TOTAL, 156,890 TONS—TWO ON WAYS AT CAMDEN; CHESTER YARD BUILDING THREE—ONE A CABLE SHIP.

Twenty-six vessels of 156,890 gross tons were included in the seagoing tonnage building or contracted for in the United States on November 1, according to reports compiled by the American Bureau of Shipping.

Among these were two 6,800-ton tankers, under construction by the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, Camden, for builder's account, and three vessels under construction by the Sun Shipbuilding Co., as follows: Nine-thousand-ton tanker for the Sun Oil Co., 4,000-ton passenger steamship for Inter-Island Steam Navigation Co., and 600-ton cable ship for the Commercial Pacific Cable Co.

The Pusey & Jones Shipbuilding Co., of Wilmington, is building two combined passenger and cargo boats of 2,710 tons each for the Seaboard Bay Line.

The new tonnage includes 12 strictly cargo ships, aggregating 88,970 tons; 7 combined passenger and cargo vessels, aggregating 30,220 tons; 2 passenger ships, with a combined tonnage of 13,000; 4 tankers, aggregating 24,100 tons; and 1 cable ship, 600 tons.

Among orders placed since November 1 is one for two ferryboats for the Philadelphia-Camden service, just awarded to the Pusey & Jones Co. The boats will be 200 feet long and will be the fastest ferryboats on the Delaware.

INQUIRIES FOR SHIPS INCREASE, SAYS BROKER.

An increasing number of inquiries for ships is reported by John H. Fisher, of Chapman & Fisher, ship brokers.

"Right now," said Mr. Fisher, "we are getting more inquiries from prospective purchasers than at any time in the last eight months. These calls come from parties whom we know to be responsible, and we know that the inquiries are genuine. Usually they are for some special type of vessel, and it is not always easy to find just what is wanted, but we are confident that they indicate an increasing demand for ships.

"If Congress passes the ship subsidy bill we expect it to put new life into shipping and every industry connected with it. At present we frequently are asked to quote rates on charters to foreign ports, but practically no business is done in this line, as we handle only American ships, and they can not meet the rates offered for foreign bottoms."

[From Collier's Weekly of January 13, 1923.]

THEY LOOK PRETTY, BUT DO THEY PAY?

(By Irving T. Bush.)

"Do you want American goods in the markets of the world?" "Do you want the American ships sailing the seven seas?" "Shall we cravenly refuse the challenge of world trade?"

How do you answer? How do I answer? We don't answer. We just cheer. For those are noble sentiments and they have to be cheered. Somehow the sea holds a mysterious lure even for those who have never seen it. When I was 19 I went around the world in a sailing ship, and I think I would do it again if I could find the time and the sailing ship. I have crossed the Atlantic nearly a hundred times. I get to London much oftener than to San Francisco. Yet I still feel a little tingle of adventure when the bugle blows the visitors ashore and the ship moves out of the dock to head for the open sea.

The salt water is in our blood. The chantey, the clipper ship bowling through the gale with every inch of canvas set, the whalers putting out of Nantucket for the unknown, the homeward-bound steamer, the companies of merchant adventurers, Drake, Frobisher, Captain Kidd, the Spanish Main—these things are of our very blood. One is suspicious of a man who does not love a ship. We suspect him of not loving a dog or of wanting to nationalize children, or perhaps of being a vegetarian. I, for one, refuse to part with any of these emotions. I have no more desire to be an internationalist than I have to be a polygamist, to borrow from Roosevelt.

OUR SALT-WATER EMOTIONS.

But also I am distinctly fed up on imperialism, for it always has a sordid side. I am willing to see if our salt-water emotions are not the result of a heritage of thought that is not based on present-day facts. Is there any particular reason why we here in the United States of America should break our necks scrambling for foreign trade or break our backs trying to support a merchant marine? My business consists in large part of providing terminal facilities for ships in the overseas trade. In cold dollars and cents it makes no difference whether the vessels which tie up at my docks are of American or foreign registry, but if we have a great American merchant marine and a great foreign commerce there will be more competition for wharfage and warehousing, which means a greater demand for what I have to sell. My personal interest is on the side of America capturing the trade of the world and sending out goods in American bottoms.

Let us take a look at this whole matter of foreign trade—for whether or not we want a merchant marine depends on whether or not we want foreign trade. The real question concerns the relation between foreign trade and domestic prosperity. Does prosperity depend upon selling part of our products overseas; and if so, what part? There would certainly seem to be no doubt that if the world were buying liberally from us we should be in quite the same position as a store with a large number of profitable out-of-town customers. Visiting buyers, it would seem, ought always to be welcome. We had a great number of visiting buyers during the war. The whole world came here to buy, and in consequence every workshop in the country was running full blast. We not only made for ourselves but we made for everyone else. We monopolized the trade of the world. And what did we get out of it? Principally the privilege of paying the bills as well as doing the selling.

Of course, we did a land-office business. We couldn't help doing it, for not only were all other sources of supply cut off to the foreign buyers but we also loaned to them the money with which to pay us. There were no elements of trade at all, not even the element of price, for, since we were paying for what we pretended to be selling, the man who pretended to be buying from us did not bother how much we charged ourselves.

Our unique sales plan found great popularity throughout the world. It was popular here at home. It began to look as though Midas were just a back number. Then the Government shut off its loans, and the bankers began to shut off their loans, and then the people abroad began to realize the awful truth that we were no longer going to pay for what they bought. They were quite outraged and quit us cold. That is how what is called, for want of a better name, our great "foreign-trade revival" started, and that also is how it ended, and that also is all there is to it.

While this merry distribution of American produce was going on our merchants and manufacturers met often and enthusiastically to lay plans for capturing the world's trade.

It was taken for granted that there would be customers. A few unemotional men pointed out certain defects in the scheme, but these were brushed aside. The chief defect which they noted was that trade is only barter and that the limit of a country's capacity to import is its capacity to export, and that no country could plan only to export unless it planned also to get along without being paid.

Since those happy days we have seen the production of the world fall very low, and therefore its buying capacity fall very low. The inevitable has happened. Certain laws govern foreign trade, and they have to be thought about even though they are not more sprightly than a wet blanket. A country's wants will ordinarily develop as fast as its production. The production is the measure of buying power. A country may send abroad part of its production, but in exchange it must get a part of some other country's production. Each country will naturally acquire a special proficiency in some line of industry or have a surplus of some natural product. It may even have a natural monopoly, as Chile has of nitrates, and parts of the Far East have of rubber and tea. But for every export an equivalent import has to be received.

This is a perfectly plain statement. It is not quite so plain when applied to world movements, and especially in the case of those countries which are always held up to us as models of what foreign trade will do for a nation. We have been told very often how before the war the export average of Belgium was $94 to an inhabitant; that in England it was $45; in Germany, $35; while in the United States it was only $26. It can be shown at the height of our prosperity our average rose to $50 a person—which is apparently all that needs to be demonstrated.

WHAT MAKES US PROSPEROUS?

What do we mean by being prosperous? If the general well-being of a people depends upon the amount of its foreign trade, then we ought to find the highest average export per capita indicating the highest average standard of living. But the plain fact is that we find nothing of the kind. In the four countries I have just given the highest standard of living is with the country with the lowest export per capita. We know that before the war the United States had the highest standard of living and Germany the next highest, and that England's standard was low and Belgium's still lower. I am thinking of the ordinary man working for wages and not of the rich man.

It is inevitable that any country which thinks first of foreign markets and second of home markets will find all the evils of the factory system. A nation whose customers lie outside of its own borders can not regulate its own wages. They must be regulated by the inexorable competition of other nations. If a nation must sell its goods in foreign markets, it can sell them only if they are as good and as cheap as similar goods produced by other nations. This makes it absolutely impossible for such nations to regulate their own wages. They must be brought down to the level of those with whom they compete.

Most of the objections to the factory system, most of the socialistic, communistic, and guild doctrines that are brought over here by foreigners and sought to be planted upon our society have been evolved by studying the industries of countries whose principal business has been in export. And it is an extraordinary fact—or perhaps it is not an extraordinary fact, because we all think very much alike—that those who insist that the United States can prosper only through foreign trade are likewise thinking of this country in terms of foreign economic life. They insist that because England had a great foreign trade and has a great merchant marine we should likewise have them—and they think no further.

SELLING OVERSEAS.

We here in America are not in like case with England or Germany or Belgium or any other country in the world. We produce our own foodstuffs. We are, as far as necessities are concerned, almost self-contained. Our list of essential imports is low and when we have named coffee, tea, silk, jute, rubber, and nitrates we are nearly at the end.

Our imports are preponderantly of will, not of necessity. Our exports before the war were natural ones that did not find any real competition, such as raw products like cotton, wheat, and oil. Our especial genius has been in mass production and in labor-saving machinery and appliances, and so, without competing with European labor, we have been able to send out harvesting machines and automobiles, sewing machines, cash registers, typewriters, calculating machines, and the like. We have never pitted our labor against European labor, and what we exported before the war was just about enough to pay for what we imported, plus transportation, insurance, interest payments that we owed, and the amount spent by our tourists.

Of course, we shall always have to export about enough to pay for what we buy abroad, although that balance may be settled by the fact that the countries abroad have to pay us interest on the war loans—which means they have to send us goods. If the 48 States of this country were separate sovereignties, would any one of those States for an instant bother about seeking trade across the Atlantic or the Pacific? We would have our foreign trade at home. We have it at home now. We can find almost every climatic condition within the borders of the United States that we find anywhere on earth. During our most truly prosperous years this country did not bother about going overseas excepting to sell such articles as were out of competition, because we made them so much better or cheaper than anyone else did.

If we did not need this excess trade in the past, why do we need it now? Because foreign trade is stabilizing—it prevents us from having up and down years. Does it? It has been calculated that the difference in the actual volume of business, regardless of the dollars, in a prosperous time is only about 15 per cent higher than it is in a time of depression.

The other day I read a long, learned account of just how selling our surplus abroad can make up the difference between good and bad times, and the assumption was that at a very definite point the United States rose from the table and said it would not eat anything more—that there really was a point of satiation and that when we got beyond that point we must have bad business unless the surplus be sold abroad. The surplus need not be large—a difference of consumption of only about 5 per cent in an industry will cause remarkable disturbances. But can not we absorb that surplus ourselves? Would we not do better to cultivate the development and the consumption of this great, rich, far-flung Nation than to go roaming through the world trying to induce economically less fitted people to buy from us, more especially when we see that those nations which have become great through foreign trade have done so at the expense of their working people? The rank and file of the people of this country will not be helped by any foreign-trade drive unless it rests upon permanent sales to solvent customers. At least the rank and file elsewhere have not been so helped. They have traded abroad only because they could not trade at home. We can trade at home.

AN IN-AND-OUT BUSINESS.

The nations of the past which went into overseas trade and have become famous as mariners did so because that was about all that they could do for a living.

Years ago we found that having ships paid. We were then a little country, much like England, for we stopped at the Alleghenies. The South owned land and slaves and raised cotton. It had a low buying power, for if we exclude the slaves it was but sparsely settled. New England was a workshop and fishery. It had plenty of timber near at hand. It could build fine wooden ships better and cheaper than other countries and our sailormen knew not only how to manage them at sea but how to trade their cargoes on land. The big figure was the Yankee trader, and he could do something more than hold his own anywhere on earth. We went into shipping because it paid and not for any patriotic reason. And we got out of it when we found something to do that paid better, which was building railways and opening up the West.

Our wooden sailing ships could not make money against the iron steamers which England developed. And England developed them only because she had the iron and was dependent for foodstuffs from over the ocean. She had to send her own wagons after her goods, because there were no others to send. The European nations have always been more interested in getting our goods than we have been in sending them; it means more to England to get our wheat and meat than it does to us to send them. Where it has meant more to us to send than it did to the other fellow to get, then we have built ships and operated them, as witness the fleets of the Standard Oil or the United States Steel Cos.

In what way does delivery by sea differ from delivery by land? A merchant with goods to deliver buys a truck or hires it, according to which is cheapest. If he has to deliver somewhere in a place to which no truck that he can hire will go, then he calculates whether the trade is worth buying a truck for; if it is not, then he lets the trade go. We ought not to make it hard for such of our citizens as want ships to own them.

For many years we have heard talk about the necessity for a merchant marine. The necessity was said to be so urgent that it was worth while to pay the cost of running vessels out of the Public Treasury—that ships were as essential to our well-being as are the railways. How does that come about? Because we need foreign trade? Ships have never been profitable during any long period; shipping is an in-and-out sort of business. During the war shipowners made money by the barrel, but the ordinary year is lean enough. Few Americans in these days want to be seamen excepting in time of war; outside of the fishermen, the few boys who go to sea do so in the Navy. We have not officers enough for even a moderate-sized American merchant marine. And as for seamen, England herself draws on the Lascars and the Chinese. Is this the sort of thing that we want to get into?

FACE THE FACTS.

But we have already a merchant marine at hand and built—the Shipping Board fleet. What are we going to do with it? And are we going to find ourselves in another war without ships to transport our troops and supplies? And how about naval auxiliaries? It pays other nations to cover part of the expenses of fast merchant ships, just so they can be transformed into scout cruisers and commerce destroyers in time of war.

After a man has bought an automobile he seldom stops to ask himself if he really needs it. He just goes on trying to find the money to buy gas, tires, and the other things necessary to keep it on the road. Is this the way with our merchant marine? I don't know. I am not arguing a point; I am asking a question. Certainly if we could translate our ships back into the cash they cost we would make the swap at once. Of course, that can not be done. We have the ships and must face the facts, and they are not pleasant.

SHALL WE TAKE A TAXI?

There is no use of crying over spilt milk—let's mop it up and start fresh. That the ships were built under war pressure, in yards constructed with war extravagance, of materials selected sometimes because it was all we had, by men only learning the art of shipbuilding, is ancient history now. The present problem is, Shall we keep them going or had we better sell and take taxis?

I admire Mr. Harding greatly. I voted for him and hope to do so again, but I can not bring myself to believe that a merchant marine that can be maintained only by a subsidy, by paying out the taxpayers' money to some one to run it, is worth maintaining. If we can't get along without ships, we must pay the price, but, after all, we did get along without them for a great many years and the country grew and its trade increased. Whenever we had goods going to or from other countries there were always ships ready to carry them on a competitive basis. Rates were high when shipping was brisk, and dull when it was slow. I can not remember any American shipowner cutting rates just because he was an American. We were just producers of goods and we hired some one else as cheaply as possible to deliver our goods and haul in our raw materials.

It is the same problem every manufacturer faces. Shall he own a truck or hire one? If it's cheaper to own one, let us own one, but if it costs so much to run an American ship that we must pay some one a bonus to do it, where do we get off with a saving?

Some say let us change our laws about crews, and so forth, and make it cheaper. The plain fact is that, law or no law, American boys will not go to sea unless they are paid about as good wages as they get on land. This is true of the boys of other countries, too, but their wages on land are lower than ours.

Therefore a subsidy is not a temporary expedient to build up a merchant marine, but, if undertaken, a permanent policy. Is it likely to be permanent? Will it work easily and smoothly without scandal? Or will some coming Congress catch some shipowner with his thumb in the molasses and kick the whole thing over—and with it all the money we have spent?

WORSE THAN A WALL FLOWER.

No very sensible man is going into a business based on a bonus which may be withdrawn at any time. What shall we do? We can't sell the ships—shall we sink them? By no means! We have the ships and have paid our good money for them. It may be that there still remain some not worth keeping at any price, but the fleet has been pretty well pruned. The remainder should be kept until we can sell them to be operated under our flag. This is difficult just now for two reasons—shipping business is bad and we have not yet developed a sufficient number of men who know the shipping business. A subsidy will not correct either of these difficulties, but time will. If there is no freight to carry, a bonus will not create it, and experienced operators of ships can come only as men acquire experience. In the end, the ships should be sold, for the Government is not a success in business. This has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of sensible men. In the meantime, it is better to keep a part of the fleet idle than to run them at a loss.

The plain fact is that the ships are better at anchor if they are not wanted and when they are wanted it is better to charter those we now own to Americans without any interest or depreciation—taking a share of net earnings as compensation and leaving to the future the question of new ships. As time passes, it will develop whether a merchant marine can justify itself under the American flag. If it can not, let's hire our hauling done for us.

Within our own boundaries we can make our own laws and live our own lives. Beyond our boundaries we must be ready to pay the piper of competition or not dance. It is more becoming for Miss Columbia to be a wall flower than to hire a partner.

THE SHIPS WE BUILD NEXT.

And as for war needs: If ever again we have to fight overseas, the world's ships will be at our command again. These new ships of ours did not have much to do with winning the war excepting in a moral way. They were not built in time. Our coast and lake steamers will be with us in the future as they were in the past. Commerce destroyers? If we need them, why not build them as warships and own them as such, instead of fooling ourselves by spending huge sums to maintain makeshift vessels of little real use as destroyers when war comes?

And then, too, the methods of making war are changing so rapidly that, from a purely business standpoint, any large expenditure for ships of unspecialized construction would seem unwise.

If the airplane keeps developing at its present rate—and there seems to be no reason why it should not—then the transport of troops on the surface of the sea is going to be all but impossible. The airplane and the submarine can not help but make the next war different from the last. At least all the experts say so. I hope that there will not be a next war, but I should not want to be unprepared for one. The question is rather whether the maintenance of a merchant marine by a subsidy has anything to do with preparedness. Warships seem technically to become obsolete about the time they are launched. Is there any reason to believe that our auxiliaries will fare better?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand, none of these amendments are to be voted on until 4 o'clock. Therefore, I want to take up very briefly certain amendments that I am going to ask the Senate to vote on when, under the unanimous-consent agreement, it is proper to submit them and have them voted upon.

The first of these amendments is to be found on page 5, line 2. This particular amendment refers to the automobiles in use by the Alien Property Custodian. We pay the Alien Property Custodian a good salary—$10,000—a little more than a Senator or a Representative gets, and under this bill we give him an automobile. Congress never has passed a law authorizing this, and, of course, would not do so directly. Just how the Alien Property Custodian had an automobile assigned to him we do not know, but just as the practice has grown up in other departments it has grown up here. We find ordinarily that the head or chief of each bureau or department of the Government has an automobile.

The time was, Mr. President, when automobiles were confined to Cabinet officers. The truth of the matter is that the time was when the Cabinet officers each had a carriage, a horse-drawn vehicle of some kind, a landau or a coupé or a cabriolet; but in these days of automobiles we not only give Cabinet officers one or more automobiles but we give almost every chief of bureau and many others an automobile. There has been an absolutely reckless waste of the people's money in the matter of furnishing automobiles to the various department officials and clerks in the city of Washington and outside.

About two weeks ago, I believe, I offered a Senate resolution, which passed unanimously—because I believe all Senators know that a custom has grown up here of wasteful extravagance in the use of automobiles in all the departments—asking for information from every department and every independent bureau. My amendments to this bill have been pending for several days, and we have not yet heard from a single department. We have heard from some bureaus, especially those bureaus that have not any and those bureaus that have few, but we have not heard from a department. It is quite remarkable that we have not received that information. It has been known, because it was stated in the papers, that these amendments have been offered by me looking to the curtailment of the use of automobiles, and we ought to have had that information. The departments ought to have furnished it before now. There is no reason in the world why they could not have furnished the data that were asked in this resolution, but none of them have furnished the data. Whether or not they will furnish them in time for use in connection with the appropriation bills at this session, I do not know; but I do not believe any Senator here, I do not believe the chairman of the committee, I do not believe any other Senator will be willing to appropriate money in the extravagant way that we have in the past for automobiles for the use of the officials and clerks of the various departments. The truth of the matter is that we ought in terms to furnish to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the General of the Army, the ranking admiral of the Navy, and each Cabinet officer a passenger automobile—that would be 14 in all—and we ought to cut out all the rest of them. Why should we give a man, say, a $3,000 or $5,000 salary, and then furnish him with an automobile at the expense of the Government, frequently with chauffeur charges that cost virtually as much as his salary? Is that good business? Is it good legislation? It ought not to be done.

Just to show how extravagant is the use of automobiles, I submit to the Senate a report from the Shipping Board; and I want to commend the Shipping Board for their very moderate use of automobiles here in this city. I am sorry I can not commend it in the same way outside the city. According to their report they have only two here, and I am glad to hear it. It is quite remarkable for any bureau of the Government in Washington to have but two, and therefore I want to commend them; but while they have been reasonable in their use of automobiles here in the city of Washington, they have been most wastefully extravagant in the use of automobiles outside of the city of Washington. It looks as if every officer, every official stationed anywhere in the United States outside of the city has an automobile. I read from this report.

First, a Cadillac; original cost, $3,444.71; chauffeur's salary, $130; upkeep, $95.10. That is in New York.

A Dodge, in Boston; original cost, $875; upkeep, $52.30; salary of chauffeur, $100.

A Buick, in Boston; cost, $1,660; upkeep, $61.72; chauffeur's salary, $100.

A Cadillac, in Philadelphia; original cost, $3,697.50; upkeep, $90.78; chauffeur's salary, $130.

Another Cadillac, in Philadelphia; original cost, $2,932.22; upkeep, $80.59; salary of chauffeur, $110.

Mr. KING. Those salaries and the upkeep are per month?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; per month. A Ford, in Baltimore; cost, $402; upkeep, $44.80; salary of chauffeur, $90.

A second Ford, in Baltimore; cost, $446; maintenance, $30.32; chauffeur, $90.

A Cadillac, in Norfolk; original cost, $3,426.67; upkeep, $32.23; chauffeur, $91.

A Buick, in Norfolk; cost, $1,660; upkeep, $49.07; chauffeur's salary, $104.

A Peerless, in New Orleans; original cost, $2,990; upkeep, $115.54; salary of chauffeur, $80.

A Ford, at Galveston; cost, $738.68; upkeep, $40.34; chauffeur, none. The officer evidently runs the Government car.

There was a machine at Portland operated in the same way, another at Seattle, two at San Francisco, two in London, England, one in Liverpool, one in Glasgow, one in Yokohama, and one in Manila. They have eight passenger cars at Hog Island. As the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] well says, they are just trying to "hog" all the automobiles there. What possible excuse can members of the Shipping Board give for having eight passenger cars at Hog Island at this time? Here is the explanation, and I want to read it. It is not an explanation, but it is an excuse, as the Senate will see. But before I get to that I want to say that the combined monthly cost of those 29 machines, for upkeep and service, is $2,756.36, the cost of the passenger automobiles for the Emergency Fleet Corporation alone, and that does not take into account the two they have in Washington. If the Shipping Board spend the people's money in every way as they spend it for passenger automobiles, no wonder the Shipping Board is $50,000,000 a year in the hole.

I read now from the report:

From the above statement it will be noted that the Emergency Fleet Corporation on January 15, 1923, maintained 29 automobiles outside the District of Columbia. It may be said that when the present board assumed office in June, 1921, it was found there were then being maintained outside the District of Columbia by the Emergency Fleet Corporation approximately 100 passenger automobiles.

Mr. WARREN. At what date was that?

Mr. McKELLAR. In June, 1921. I continue:

The operation of any passenger automobiles outside the District of Columbia was immediately suspended pending a survey of the general situation.

I suppose they felt horrified when they went in; but we will see how accustomed they got to the use of automobiles, at double expense, when the Government pays all the bills—pays for the automobile, pays for the upkeep of it, pays the repair bill, and pays for the chauffeur. It is easy enough to keep them going under those circumstances. Any of us could do it.

Mr. WARREN. As to chauffeurs, as a general thing, except a few, the automobiles are not driven by chauffeurs, but are driven by the officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us see how that is here.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know what might be the case with the Shipping Board, but I am speaking of the Interior Department, for instance, or other departments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Twenty-two are driven by the chauffeurs, and the salaries are from $80 to $130 each, and seven are driven by the officers. That is the proportion given here.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator to say that it seems that in the cases where there is no chauffeur, the officer is cheaper than a chauffeur.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know how that is.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Wyoming seemed to make that distinction, that the officer was cheaper than the chauffeur.

Mr. McKELLAR. The truth of the business is that these officials should not have these automobiles. There is no rime or reason or excuse for it. It is woeful waste of the people's money, for which Congress is responsible. We ought to put in an inhibition against the use of these automobiles. The mere purchase of the automobile is a very small part of the expense. It is the upkeep of them, it is the gasoline that is used, it is garage space that is used, it is the hundred other expenses in connection with the driving of these machines that makes up the big expense. But I continue to read:

For the information of the Senate it is stated that orders have been sent out—

The same old excuse we have heard so often before—

Orders have been sent out still further reducing the number of automobiles operated by the Emergency Fleet Corporation shown in the above report, so that hereafter but one passenger car of low original cost and small operating expense, will be authorized in each of the district headquarters and this will result in eliminating six more cars which, with the six it is proposed to eliminate at Hog Island, will result in a net reduction of 12 cars by February 1, 1923.

There are eight at Hog Island, and they propose to eliminate six. They have not very much use for those cars. Yet the average cost of each one of those six machines is not less than $200 a month at Hog Island, and they have been running them there for years.

If the resolution I had passed the other day did not do any more good than this, it has helped some. As good luck will have it, I am going to be here for six more years, and I have just begun the fight on the extravagant, wasteful use of automobiles in the various departments, and I am going to keep that fight up for the next six years. I serve that notice now so that these officials may understand just exactly what they may expect in the future. I have not received any reports from the departments, but as I receive them I am going to lay them before the Senate and comment on them. You Republicans can uphold this waste and extravagance if you want to, but I shall call the people's attention to it as we go along.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I welcome the Senator to the ranks of economy. While under the last administration we had a hundred or more automobiles for the Shipping Board, I want to congratulate the Shipping Board for having gotten the number down to 22, instead having a hundred, as when the Senator did not take any interest in it at all, with a promise of getting rid of six more, I hope they can cut it in two again. I am in hopes to see it cut down below even half of what they say they can cut it to.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator makes a great mistake. I have been complaining against this matter every year, every time the appropriation bill came up, for a number of years, virtually ever since I have been in the Senate, in fact. The Senator will recall that in 1917, the first year I was here, I aroused a great deal of ire in the departments because of my insistence that they were using these automobiles for other than official purposes. I have made war on them all the time, and I am glad to know the Senator feels as I do about it. I hope he will vote as he objects. I want to say this about the Shipping Board, however: I understand they have about a thousand ships tied up which they say they can not run. They seem to be able to run passenger automobiles better than they do ships. I think probably it would be very wise to turn over to them some land transportation problem, as they seem to know better how to run automobiles than how to run ships. I continue to read:

With particular reference to the automobiles in operation at Hog Island, Pa., eight in number, it should be stated that by reason of liquidation now taking place at Hog Island the number of automobiles in use at this point will be reduced to two before February 1, 1923.

The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation makes no allowances to its employees outside the District of Columbia for privately owned automobiles. In no case are the automobiles maintained by the Emergency Fleet Corporation assigned to the use of any individual official or employee, but they are operated for the general official use at the various points shown.

This report is compiled as of January 15, 1923.

Respectfully,

A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

I think we are accomplishing a little, at any rate. I shall offer an amendment, and I hope the Senator from Utah will vote with me and will speak for the proposition, providing that no part of the appropriation for the Shipping Board shall be used for passenger-carrying automobiles. If the Senator will vote with me, we can cut out from $25,000 to $30,000 a year of useless expenditure. The gentlemen who use these machines all get excellent salaries. They are the best paid officials in the employ of the Government. There is no reason in the world why they should have this additional allowance for automobiles.

The first amendment I suggested does not apply to the Shipping Board, but I am talking about the Shipping Board because they have sent in a report. Again I want to thank them for sending their report in. That is more than many of the other departments have done, and to that extent the board is entitled to credit.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I doubt whether it would be economy to take all of the automobiles away from the officers of all of the departments.

Mr. McKELLAR. All except the 10 Cabinet officers, and the other officials I named. I think that unquestionably the others should be taken away.

Mr. SMOOT. The Cabinet officers and the other officials named by the Senator should have automobiles granted them, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. But I do think there are a few officials in the departments who really ought to be taken care of, and taken care of properly, as to transportation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that every automobile we authorize ought to be authorized in specific terms, the officer named, and the appropriation made for that specific purpose? Does the Senator think the present method of handling the matter, the cost of the automobiles, their upkeep, the rent of storage room, and chauffeur hire should come out of lump-sum appropriations for general purposes, in the way we have been doing it for a number of years?

Mr. SMOOT. I would not want to go so far as to say that it would be wise to name the officer. It would be well enough, perhaps, to name the office, but not the officer.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. Because the officers sometimes change, from one year to another. I am in full sympathy with cutting to the very bone the appropriations for automobiles for officials of the Government of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator any idea how many there are in operation here in the city of Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I could not say. I have not had time to look it up lately, but I know there are a great many less than there used to be. I do not say this in the way of criticism of the last administration at all, because more than likely if the Republicans had been in they would have done the same thing; but we had thousands and tens of thousands of automobiles stacked up all over the United States, and it was stated in the beginning, "Well, it is not going to cost the Government anything. These automobiles will lie there and rot, anyhow, and we might just as well use them and save the time of the men running around." That was all right, perhaps, in a way, and it is true we had automobiles; but anybody who ever operated an automobile and paid the expense of the maintenance of one knew that it was not all velvet, even though we did own the automobiles and it would not cost us anything to get them.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is costing us a great deal now.

Mr. SMOOT. They have lain out and spoiled, so that none of the officials want them. They want to go and buy new automobiles.

Mr. McKELLAR. The ones to which the Senator refers have worn out and the officials are getting new ones. I want to ask the Senator if he recalls, without having to refer to the papers, what the salary of the Alien Property Custodian is? It is $10,000, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. In this appropriation bill there is authority given for a passenger automobile for the Alien Property Custodian, at a cost of not less than $3,000 a year, and it may be considerably more.

It occurs in this language:

> And maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

In that way we appropriate some $3,000 to $4,000, dependent upon how much repairs and salary of chauffeur amount to, for the Alien Property Custodian. If we are to pay him $10,000 a year salary, $2,500 more than any Senator or Representative is paid, and give him three or four thousand dollars more for this passenger car, what explanation can be offered? It just happens that I know well the present Alien Property Custodian, one of the finest men I ever knew. I served with him in the House. He is a delightful gentleman. If I were in the business of being generous enough with the Government's money to give my friends each an automobile, I do not know of any man in the city of Washington and I do not know of any man in the employ of the Government to whom I would rather vote to give an automobile and its upkeep and chauffeur than this splendid gentleman who is now Alien Property Custodian. But I ask any Senator present if there is anyone who can give a reason why we should furnish the Alien Property Custodian with an automobile, its upkeep, and chauffeur? I pause for a reply. There being none, I ask, Can the chairman of the committee give any reason why we should furnish an automobile to the Alien Property Custodian, to whom we pay $10,000 a year, $2,500 more than the distinguished Senator who is chairman of the committee receives? Why should we appropriate the people's money to give him an automobile and its upkeep and a chauffeur, amounting to some three or four thousand dollars a year in addition to this $10,000 salary, when there is no law that has ever been passed by the Congress to authorize it?

Mr. WARREN. So far as that is concerned, the alien-property matter of the war and the institution that was created in consequence of the war involved a great deal of money and property placed in the hands of the custodian. We hope it will not be there long. It is already time that we should have disposed of it all, but there are a great many properties and a great many expenses. It is true, we might say, they handle the papers, the securities, and so forth; but, as a matter of fact, they also give attention to manufactories and business affairs all over the country, of which they have charge, and they have to have transportation.

I am not defending in any particular way the automobile as against horse transportation or transportation by taxi, street car, and so forth, but we have used a great deal of transportation for these offices. As to the Alien Property Custodian himself, I think it is necessary that he should have an automobile.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I think the Alien Property Custodian should be granted an automobile for far greater reasons than some others who have been granted automobiles.

Mr. McKELLAR. But that is a different proposition. We are not discussing that part of it. I want to know what official duty the Alien Property Custodian performs with an automobile except going to and from his office. I would like some information on that point.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, I will say to the Senator he goes outside of the District of Columbia very often. He makes examinations of property in New Jersey, in Philadelphia, and in Baltimore.

Mr. McKELLAR. But there are trains on which he could go a great deal cheaper and a great deal more quickly. Why should a man be given an automobile to waste away his time going from here to Philadelphia or from here to New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think he wastes his time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I disagree with the Senator about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think he saves time by it.

Mr. McKELLAR. He can not go to Philadelphia by automobile in less than a day. He loses a whole day's time. He can only travel in the daytime.

Mr. SMOOT The Senator does not know how fast automobiles move.

Mr. McKELLAR. We can easily demonstrate that. When the Senator from Utah goes to Philadelphia does he go by automobile? He does not have the time for that.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course not He does not have the time. The Senator is too busy attending to his official duties to be meandering around the country in Government automobiles. He does not have the spare time to do it, and yet the Government does not furnish the Senator with an automobile even to ride on Sunday.

Mr. SMOOT. Really I do not think the Senator ought to compare a Senator's salary with that of the Alien Property Custodian under the existing conditions.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not compare with it, because the Alien Property Custodian gets much more than a Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no Senator in this body who thinks $7,500 is proper compensation for a Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Probably so.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not even believe that. I am speaking seriously. I do not think a Senator is paid a salary commensurate with his labors. I have said that many times. I believe if Senators did not fear criticism which perhaps would be made, they would not stand for it at all. The Senator knows that just as well as I know it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think the Senator is right about both propositions. I agree with him that Senators are entitled to more than $7,500 a year on the strict quantum meruit. But here is the proposition: Why should we give other officials of the Government these gratuities and bounties which we deny to ourselves? No one would think of voting each Senator an automobile, chauffeur, and money for upkeep and operation. I think we ought to be just as careful in dealing with other people's money as we are in dealing with our own. In my judgment the Alien Property Custodian uses a car principally for other than official purposes, and so does the head of every other department. In what I have said about the Alien Property Custodian, of course I am not referring to the present occupant of that office personally. I am merely referring to the custom that has grown up here to give the heads of bureaus, and frequently other officials in the various departments, automobiles at Government expense without authority of law.

I want to ask the Senator from Utah if there is any law anywhere authorizing automobiles to be given the heads of bureaus other than that contained in appropriation acts?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever. The appropriation acts carry them all.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only reason why they are not subject to a point of order is because the House has passed them, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Otherwise the item would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. Unless the committee reported it and the House of Representatives passed it.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, we are appropriating probably millions of dollars for the use of automobiles when there is not a line of law authorizing it, not a bit of authority in the law for it. Yet we do it every year.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator means permanent law, of course?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; of course. I doubt if this hardly rises to the dignity of temporary law, the way we have it, because we have to go into the acts and ferret it out. It is all covered up. Let me show how it is covered up in the pending appropriation bill. Referring again to the Alien Property Custodian item—

For expenses of the Alien Property Custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended; including personal and other services and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference and periodicals, supplies and equipment, and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $280,000.

That is a lump-sum proposition; a bad way to legislate to begin with. It does not even fix the salary of the Alien Property Custodian. It fixes the salary of no one in his department. Thus in that insidious way, if I may so express it, we include a motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicle, which virtually increases the salary of the Alien Property Custodian $4,000 a year.

By the way, I thought the Senator from Utah was very much opposed to lump-sum appropriations?

Mr. SMOOT. I am, I will say to the Senator. I think wherever there is a department that may be a permanent department we never ought to allow a lump-sum appropriation. But this is a department or bureau of our Government which is not going to be in existence very long. For instance, I will say to the Senator in behalf of the Alien Property Custodian, that last year there was granted to him $370,000, and he did not spend that amount. He will turn back into the Treasury of the United States this year $60,000. Now we are giving him this year but $280,000. He has $350,000,000 worth of property——

Mr. McKELLAR. Has he still got that much?

Mr. SMOOT. He has $350,000,000 worth of property to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought Congress had appropriated most of it and turned it back to its owners.

Mr. SMOOT. No; he still has $350,000,000 worth.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator wants to keep that until the claims involved are determined, does he not?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, he will have to do so, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am talking about the Senator, because it requires the action of Congress as to whether the Alien Property Custodian shall pay it out. He can not pay it out unless we direct him to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that was what the Senator meant.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to have the Senator's assurance.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say for the record, so it will be straight, that there is about $200,000,000 of actual money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Alien Property Custodian——

Mr. McKELLAR. He does not need an automobile to look after that $200,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I had no reference then to the automobile.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I have that on my mind, because that is the matter to which I am addressing myself.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply said that so the record will be straight, so that at some future time my statement could not be pointed to as being not altogether correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would like to ask the Senator another question. Of what does the other $150,000,000 consist?

Mr. SMOOT. There is $200,000,000 in the Treasury in cash and there is $350,000,000 worth of property.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition?

Mr. SMOOT. In addition to the cash.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, $550,000,000 altogether?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; $550,000,000 worth of property altogether. Of course, the cash is a mere matter of bookkeeping. He does not have to look after that, and it does not take any time. When it is paid out it will be merely a matter of writing the check.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am still at a loss to know how he could possibly use a passenger automobile in looking after the cash and other property here in the city of Washington. The office used to be down on Sixteenth Street. I do not know where it is now; but wherever it may be, I do not see how he could use a passenger automobile, except possibly for going to the bank or in coming from his home in the morning and going back there in the afternoon or taking pleasure trips. There is no excuse in the world for the Government furnishing the Alien Property Custodian with an automobile and we ought not to permit it. I am going to ask for a yea-and-nay vote on my amendment when we come to it.

I next take up the Civil Service Commission. We have a report from the Civil Service Commission. I think they have only one car, but I do not know why members of the Civil Service Commission should have a car. According to my observation, a Senator of the United States or a Member of the House, if he looks after his affairs, needs an automobile very much more than a member of the Civil Service Commission possibly could, who just simply has to go from his home to his office in the morning and back again at night. He does not have to go to the various departments all over Washington, Senators and Congressmen do. I can not imagine by what authority of law we are giving the Civil Service Commission a passenger automobile, except that we just want to devise means to waste the people's money.

I do not believe the Federal Trade Commission have one, and that is to their credit.

The General Accounting Office, it seems, have not one, either, and that is to their credit.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has none, and that is to their credit.

Can the Senator from Utah tell me how many automobiles the Housing Corporation now has?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know the number, but I would say quite a number.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator from Utah give any reason in the world why the Housing Corporation should be supplied a passenger automobile at Government expense?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the Housing Corporation has charge of about 6,000 houses, which are located in different parts of the country, and I think they use automobiles mostly for visiting the different places in which those houses are located.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be impossible for them to use passenger automobiles to visit the houses belonging to the Government in various parts of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some of those houses are located where one could not get to the place in an automobile. I remember some Government houses in the neighborhood of Newport News, Va., which could not be reached in three days in an automobile. There are Government houses all over the country which, on account of their location, can only be visited by railroad trains, as we all know. Why should the members of the Housing Corporation be allowed a number of automobiles for the purpose stated by the Senator from Utah? There is no excuse for it. It is merely a form of temporarily legalized graft to which, under the form of law, we devote the people's money.

Mr. President, I can not state the number of automobiles used by the different departments, because I have not a list of them here; but, in order that we may have something to go upon, I will ask the Senator from Utah if he knows how many automobiles are used by the War Department here in Washington and to whom they are assigned?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the resolution which had been introduced by the Senator from Tennessee would bring the information, but I take it for granted that the resolution has not been answered up to the present time, because, perhaps, the department has not received the information from the different sections of the country, and they would have to do so before answering the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have asked them to state the number of automobiles in use in the city of Washington separately, in order that we might get the information speedily, but they have not yet done so.

Mr. SMOOT. That, perhaps, they could do very quickly, but I presume they intended to answer both requests at once.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Shipping Board have obtained the information from all over the country—from San Francisco to Maine. There has been no delay about that.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Shipping Board does not have as many automobiles as the War Department has.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Utah mean to say that the War Department has a great many more passenger automobiles than has the Shipping Board?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any doubt of it at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator have any idea what the passenger automobiles which are in use by the War Department cost the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean the cost for their maintenance?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; for maintenance.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I can not say as to that, not having the figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it is a very large sum?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the War Department has more automobiles than has any other department of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. But every department of the Government has a great number of automobiles?

Mr. SMOOT. I would not say that every department has a great number of automobiles, but I think each department has one or more of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of passenger automobiles, which are assigned to the various officials of the department? As I understand the Senator, he is going to vote to eliminate the appropriations for them?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I did not say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is just what I am trying to get the Senator to do, because if the Senator will join me in my effort we shall get rid of automobiles which ought not to be in the hands of various subordinate officers of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there might be a mistake made one way or a mistake made another in regard to this matter. I do not think it is desirable that we shall go forward and make a great reduction in the number of automobiles which are now used by the different departments of the Government without an investigation and without knowing what might be the result of our action. I would not entirely abolish the use of the automobiles by the departments, for I think that would be wrong; I think it would be very detrimental to the Government service; but I have no doubt their number might be reduced. I think that matter is worthy of very close attention and investigation. I can not now say, however, that I should favor abolishing them all, because I know that would work a hardship and be a detriment to the Government service.

Mr. McKELLAR. But have I not convinced the Senator from Utah that the automobile which is now allotted to the Alien Property Custodian should be taken away from him?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I hardly think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am going to give the Senator an opportunity to vote on that question in a few moments.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to vote on it. The Senator from Utah is never afraid to vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure of that, and I am not complaining that he is, but I want him to vote on the right side, and I want to cut down the number of automobiles now allowed to Government officials.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to have the Senator from Tennessee, before he offers his amendment, inform us what automobiles are used by Government officials for public business and what are used for private purposes by such officials. I think we should put a stop to the use of Government automobiles by officials for their private convenience, but, of course, if they are used for the transaction of Government business which makes it necessary for them to travel long distances, a different question is presented. I think, however, it is true that the use of a great number of such automobiles ought to be discontinued.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from South Carolina understands the situation perfectly. In the case of the Alien Property Custodian we pay him a salary of $10,000 a year and also allow him the use of an automobile, which costs about $4,000 more, without any authority of law except that which is contained in this appropriation bill. Can the Senator from South Carolina state what use the Alien Property Custodian should have for an automobile except to go to and from his office?

Mr. DIAL. I think he ought to walk or ride on the street cars to his office or else use his own automobile for that purpose. I will vote with the Senator from Tennessee in favor of the amendment which he has stated he intends to propose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, I have secured one convert anyway.

Mr. DIAL. No; for I have always agreed with the Senator on the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. President, I believe that is all I wish to say in reference to this matter.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask a question of my friend from Tennessee. The Senator from Tennessee awhile ago was speaking of the number of automobiles owned by the Shipping Board, and I understood him to commend the board for having only two automobiles in use in Washington, but he was inclined to criticize them because, I understood him to say, they had eight automobiles at Hog Island.

Mr. McKELLAR. They had eight automobiles at Hog Island, and they criticize themselves by saying that they were going to get rid of six out of the eight on the 1st of February. It is remarkable that they concluded to get rid of six just after my resolution passed. I am not criticizing them about the automobiles which they have at Hog Island any more than they are criticizing themselves, for they have said they had eight automobiles there and they needed but two and were going to cut the number down to two.

Mr. WILLIS. That was exactly the information I was going to give the Senator from Tennessee. I was interested in his statement, and I telephoned the Shipping Board in order to get the latest information. They said that six of the eight cars at Hog Island would be dispensed with this week, and at some other point 12 more would be dispensed with, and therefore the good work is going on.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator that I hope others outside of the Shipping Board will get on the mourners' bench in regard to these automobiles. If they do not, there is going to be a good deal of trouble in every department of the Government over the matter, because there is involved frightful waste and extravagance, which ought to be stopped. I am going to make war on them from now on.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was merely wondering if the Shipping Board had the proposed subsidy whether they could not still operate the eight automobiles at Hog Island.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think if we were to provide the $30,000,000 cash subsidy they might operate fully that many at Hog Island and elsewhere, if they wanted to do so. I do not know whether they would operate any more ships, but they might operate a few more automobiles.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13926) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer [Mr. LENROOT] as Acting President pro tempore:

H. R. 12777. An act granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Red River of the North;

H. R. 13139. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a railroad bridge across Pearl River at approximately 1½ miles north of Georgetown, in the State of Mississippi;

H. R. 13195. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Missouri, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River in the State of Missouri;

H. R. 13474. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, the town of Rockford, and the city of

Rockford, in said county, in the State of Illinois, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River;

H. R. 13493. An act to authorize the State road department of the State of Florida to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Escambia River, near Ferry Pass, Fla.;

H. R. 13511. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Paul, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River;

S. J. Res. 43. Joint resolution to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C.; and

H. J. Res. 16. Joint resolution providing for pay to clerks to Members of Congress and Delegates.

RETIREMENT PAY OF MAJOR GENERAL HARBORD.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, without being critical, because I very much like the Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, I want to call attention to a very remarkable interview given out by the Secretary as it appears in the newspapers of Sunday, January 21, under the headline "Weeks says House insulted Harbord."

It seems that in the House the appropriation to take care of the retirement pay of General Harbord was eliminated from the Army bill. As I understand, General Harbord has retired from the Army and accepted the presidency of a very large industrial corporation. Whatever the reasons that actuated the House in refusing to make appropriation for the retirement pay of General Harbord, the Secretary of War sees fit to grow exceedingly caustic in his criticism of it for so doing. In this interview is this language:

I do not believe the people of this country wish its great defenders treated in such a shameful way, and I should think General Harbord would feel that a country that would tamely submit to such treatment of one of its officers was hardly worth serving.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD the entire interview of the Secretary of War.

There being no objection, the interview was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WEEKS SAYS HOUSE INSULTED HARBORD—DECLARES IT INFERRED DISHONESTY IN DENYING RETIREMENT PAY TO ARMY OFFICER—PRAISES GENERAL'S SERVICES—CALLS PRESENT POST AS HEAD OF RADIO CORPORATION OF IMPORTANCE TO PUBLIC.

The action of the House in amending the Army appropriation bill in such a way as to deny retirement pay to Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, retired, who left active service to become president of the Radio Corporation of America was characterized by Secretary Weeks in a formal statement last night as "an insult to General Harbord and to the Government itself."

Regardless of General Harbord's position in civil life, the Secretary said, "the best interests of his Government will be his chief concern." He added that he "should think General Harbord would feel that a country that would tamely submit to such treatment of one of its officers was hardly worth serving."

PRAISES HARBORD'S SERVICES.

The Secretary pointed out that General Harbord had risen from the ranks, and had served in France successively as chief of staff of the American Expeditionary Forces, commanding officer of the famous Second Division, and head of the Service of Supply. In the last-named division, he said, the officer rendered such extraordinary service as to attract world-wide attention and win the praise of military and civilian authorities alike.

"For nearly 40 years," said Mr. Weeks's statement, "General Harbord has been faithfully and efficiently serving the Government and, regardless of what position he may occupy in civil life, the best interests of his Government will be his chief concern. Any inference to the contrary reflects on the person making it. As a matter of fact, the Government's business with the Radio Corporation is inconsequential. At the present time we have no contract with it, and, generally speaking, purchases of radio equipment, which are of small moment in total amount, are made from the manufacturers.

CALLS PRESENT POST IMPORTANT.

"The development of the radio is of vast importance, and there is, therefore, a public reason why he should accept and fill that position, retaining his place on the retired list of the Army so that he would be available for service in an emergency. If a British officer, French officer, or an officer of any other nation had performed for his Government the service rendered by General Harbord, instead of having this stigma attached to him—that is, the inference that he is dishonest, not to mention taking away his retired pay—he would have been given honors of very important character and, certainly in the case of Great Britain, a large honorarium as well.

"I do not believe the people of this country wish its great defenders treated in such a shameful way, and I should think General Harbord would feel that a country that would tamely submit to such treatment of one of its officers was hardly worth serving. He will certainly feel a sense of injustice which time can never efface."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I call attention to the interview, and particularly to its concluding paragraph, for two reasons: First, I do not believe the Secretary of War did General Harbord justice when he attributed to that distinguished officer such sordid motives; that he would feel he owed no duty to his country unless the country should give him retirement pay. Second, I think the Secretary rendered a poor service to this distinguished officer and to the Army in that interview. If the Secretary wants the country to believe that Army officers feel they owe no duty to the Nation unless and only as they are paid for it, it is a revelation the country, I am sure, will receive with a shock.

Mr. President, Mr. Weeks is so outraged because retirement pay is denied to General Harbord, who as a major general retires at his own request to become the president of a great industrial corporation at a large salary, thinks this act of the House releases General Harbord from any further obligation to serve his country; that this act absolves him from any further allegiance to that flag he followed for 40 years; to all obligation to the uniform he has worn from his youth up.

And yet this is the same Secretary of War, Mr. President, who was so opposed to the ex-service men of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps receiving a little 'retirement pay" in the nature of adjusted compensation. He, among others, agreed with the President in his veto of the adjusted compensation act, and in that intimated that adjusted compensation is a mere "commercializing of patriotism"; that the country owes these ex-service men nothing, although they had stood in the mud and mire of the trenches, had smelled the hot smoke of battle, and had felt the smart of battle wounds. They were "commercial" patriots if they ask that they have a retirement pay called "adjusted compensation." In their case it amounted to but a few dollars each, but here is an officer who goes out of the Army at his own request and becomes the head of a great corporation at a magnificent salary, and because the House of Representatives did not see fit to give him retirement pay, the Secretary of War says the country has so misused this distinguished officer that he owes the country no further service. If the same reasoning applies, Mr. President, as to all who serve their country in time of need, then the 4,500,000 boys whom the Secretary of War was opposed to having retirement pay, and whom the President by his veto denied such, are absolved from any further obligation to serve this country again in its hour of peril.

I do not want to be put in the attitude of criticizing General Harbord; I think he is a most excellent man, and it may be true, and probably is, that the House made a mistake in denying him his retirement pay; but I do say that he will be treated no worse if retirement pay shall be denied him than have been all the boys who served this country and who have been denied adjusted compensation.

Why should the Secretary of War, forgetting the comity that ought to exist between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, denounce the House for refusing General Harbord his retirement pay, and denounce Congress for trying to give the ex-service men a retirement pay. I am trying to emphasize the peculiarity of such a viewpoint; that it is an outrageous thing in the case of an officer who goes out of the service at his own request, to become the head of a great corporation at a large salary, to deny him retirement pay; but it is a particularly statesmanlike thing in the case of ex-service men, who were without occupation, who did not retire to accept high positions in civil life, but went back to walk the streets hunting for jobs to enable them in the sweat of their brow to earn their daily bread, for this Government to refuse them a penny.

Oh, it is the viewpoint of the administration, I admit. The Secretary speaks by the card. It is the viewpoint of this administration that you should take care of the rich and let the devil take care of the poor. If you give to those who do not need and deny assistance to those who are dependent, you have performed the duties that are assigned you under this administration. I am sure Secretary Weeks is acting in accord with the sentiment that actuates his chief when he criticizes the Congress for not taking care of the rich, but also criticizes the Congress more severely when it tries to take care of the weak.

Why, you know, this is the same Secretary that said that this Congress is at its lowest ebb; that it is the lowest Congress in point of intelligence that had ever been elected. He ought to know. It is a Republican Congress, and he helped to elect it. I should, however, like to say that the Congress measures well up with this administration, including its Cabinet officers, but in saying that I am not saying that the distinguished Secretary did not know the mental caliber of the Congress. I am not falling out with him for condemning it, because the people agreed with him, as shown by the last election. They got rid of all they could at that time, and promised to get rid of the others at the next election.

Mr. President, let me say again I am not saying that General Harbord is not a very excellent officer. I am sure he is. He was at the head of the Service of Supply during the war and made a wonderful record; and it is possible and perhaps probable that, although he is going out of the Army at his own request to take charge of a great corporation, he ought to have his retirement pay. I feel that if any officer is he should, because he is a highly intelligent and, I am sure, a very patriotic man. I know that no sordid sentiment like that here imputed to him by the Secretary of War ever entered his mind. I think the Secretary did him a very poor service, indeed, when he said that General Harbord would feel that he owed the country no further service because the country did not give him retirement pay. I believe General Harbord would serve the country without pay if the country needed his service. I am a better friend to General Harbord than is the Secretary of War.

However, the time has come—and we may as well face it, and Secretary Weeks may as well know it—when the country does not grow as enthusiastic about the high Army officers as it formerly did, not because these officers are not as intelligent and as patriotic as of old, willing to render any service that is within their power, but because war has changed, and officers of high rank no longer get the chance to excite that admiration in the minds of the men they command.

No longer does a general of high command, like General Armistead, of Virginia, at Gettysburg during Pickett's charge, put his cap upon the point of his sword and lead his men in actual combat and die amid the struggling mass of fighting men. On the other hand, the men of high rank in this Army served in France so far from the firing line their lightest slumber was never disturbed by the "cannon's sullen roar." Why, there were more general officers killed on the side of the Confederacy in the battle of Franklin, Tenn.—more of them lay dead on the porch of one house in that little town that battle day—than were struck by hostile shot among all the contending forces in the great World War. No longer, like General Jackson at the first Battle of Manassas, does an officer of high command walk backward and forward in front of his kneeling line and tell them to be not afraid. No longer is an officer of high rank like the distinguished ancestor of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], killed at the head of his charging troops, as was General Wadsworth at the Battle of the Wilderness. Those times are gone, and people do not grow heroic about general officers any more.

You need not try to make a hero out of an officer who never heard a hostile shot; he may be just as patriotic, just as willing to die for his country, but the opportunity has been denied him. You can not grow enthusiastic about our "great" Admiral Sims, who served his country so patriotically in an opera box in London during the war. It is not possible, and Secretary Weeks must learn it. There is not going to be any revolution about this matter. The country is going to feel a great deal more acutely the Secretary's bitter attack upon the ex-service men who actually stood in the line of fire and died by the thousands, and who have been denied redress.

As an example, I have here a letter telling how a man who was wounded in France, decorated for bravery, and although disabled has been trying to get compensation—to get hospital treatment—recently, under an order, traveled 300 miles to have a physical examination made—a new one—and was, after he reported at the place where the examination was to be had, compelled to sit for seven long hours while the officers talked, went out to lunch, came back and talked more; to wait until night came. There are thousands and thousands of boys walking the streets to-day afflicted with disease or suffering from wounds who never have had their grievances redressed, and yet the distinguished Secretary of War has never taken up the cudgels in their behalf.

Only the other day I called attention to a boy in my State who was decorated 11 times for bravery, and died a pauper while he was being cared for by his friends, and not one dollar of the Government's aid ever came to him while he lived, and the Secretary was not outraged about that; on the contrary, wrote me a letter—a complaining letter—because I said that the Army was busy decorating officers who did not hear a shot fired during battle. I do not care for this criticism of me by the Secretary. It may have been just. I am not criticizing him in return. In fact, I am not criticizing him at all. I am just calling attention to the fact that he represents the real spirit that actuates this administration. The President vetoed the compensation bill for the soldiers, and his spokesmen approved it; and now, because the House failed to take care of the pay of a retiring Army officer, the Secretary says—I want to read again—

I do not believe the people of this country wish its great defenders treated in such a shameful way, and I should think General Harbord would feel that a country that would tamely submit—to such treatment of one of its officers was hardly worth serving.

That is, if it would not take up arms—

If you treat the enlisted men that way, that is all right; but lay not your hands on the sacred rights of an officer. If you do, according to the Secretary of War, you may expect a revolution.

He concludes by saying:

He will certainly feel a sense of injustice which time can never efface.

Mr. President, I wonder if those 4,500,000 boys that the President denied by his veto any adjusted compensation will also "feel a sense of injustice that time never can efface"? Oh, you know, at one time there lived in Scotland a poet named Burns. He said:

O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us!
It wad frae mony a blunder free us,
An' foolish notion.

If the Secretary could see himself as others see him—how he sheds tears over an officer being denied his retirement pay, and how he rejoiced when 4,500,000 enlisted men were denied theirs—it would be well. A sense of humor might be helpful sometimes even to the Secretary of War, a great man though he is.

FEDERAL RESERVE BRANCH BANK BUILDINGS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, some time ago the Senate passed a joint resolution authorizing, under certain limitations and conditions, the construction of a reserve bank building at St. Louis and branch buildings at Little Rock, Ark., and Salt Lake City, Utah. The joint resolution, after passing the Senate, went to the body at the other end of the Capitol, was reported with amendments, and passed the House with amendments. Subsequently a conference committee was created and the conference committee reached an agreement. That agreement never has been finally disposed of by the body at the other end of the Capitol. Recently the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of that body introduced a bill changing the provision in the present law so as to permit the reserve banks, without restriction, to construct buildings for their main office and changing the existing limitation relative to the construction of branch bank buildings so as to permit the reserve banks to construct buildings for branch banks where the cost of the building proper, not including vaults, fixtures, and so forth, shall not exceed $250,000. That bill is now pending on the House Calendar.

After consulting with my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and some other Senators, I am introducing the bill reported by the chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, and I ask that it be referred to a committee. I had intended to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, but my attention is called to the fact that the measure formerly considered was referred to the Committee on Finance, so I will request that this bill be referred to the Committee on Finance in the absence of any other suggestion. I hope that early consideration of the matter may be had so that necessary legislation may be had during the present session.

The bill (S. 4390) to amend the last paragraph of section 10 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the act of June 3, 1922, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on January 22, 1923, the President approved and signed the following joint resolutions:

S. J. Res. 251. Joint resolution providing for the filling of two vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress; and

S. J. Res. 258. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13926. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to call up the conference report on House bill 13481, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be read.

The reading clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 16, 17, 22, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 23, 24, 27, 29, 30, and 32; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the investigation and improvement of cereals, including corn, and methods of cereal production, and for the study and control of cereal diseases, including barberry eradication, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $697,505: Provided, That $425,000 shall be set aside for the location and destruction of the barberry bushes and other vegetation from which rust spores originate: Provided further, That $125,000 of this amount shall be available for expenditure only when an equal amount shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by States, counties, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations, for the accomplishment of such purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$2,891,450"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$3,376,470"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,797,880"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$541,223"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$4,005,853"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 11, 31, 33, 34, and 35.

CHAS. L. MCNARY,
W. L. JONES,
I. L. LENROOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
EDWARD H. WASON,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
GORDON LEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the conference agreement unanimous?

Mr. MCNARY. There are three items upon which the conferees disagree, which must go back to the House for further consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the agreement, so far as it goes, is unanimous?

Mr. MCNARY. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make no objection to the adoption of the report.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that it is not a final disposition of the bill?

Mr. MCNARY. It is not.

The report was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13696) making appropriations for the Executive Office and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, the pending question being on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to call attention to another report that has come in since I was speaking a moment ago. By this report it appears that the assistant to the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building has an automobile. Mark you, that is the assistant to the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building. The automobile costs $1,555; cost of upkeep, $195. He also reports five garages, at a total cost of $3,523.05. Whether that is per month or per year I do not know.

Mr. KING. From the State Department?

Mr. MCKELLAR. For the office of the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building. This is separate and apart from the department. This is just an assistant superintendent of a building, to whom we furnish an automobile. I call attention especially to the five garages. Whether the charge is per month or per year is not stated, but there are two at $1,455; the third one at $785; the fourth one, on the Mall, at $691.31; and the Virginia Avenue one at $506.74; five garages at this very large cost, and in them are put this passenger automobile of the assistant superintendent of that building and 17 trucks connected with the building; 17 trucks and 1 passenger automobile, and the garage expense is $3,523.05. That is one of the glories of the present system of giving automobiles to practically all the officers of the Government who have pull enough to get them. Under the present system any official with a pull gets an automobile. Thus by pull we push ahead.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, pursuant to the agreement entered into, debate on the pending measure terminates at 4 o'clock. A very few minutes, therefore, are available, and in the limited time at my disposal it will be impossible for me to discuss this bill or even present the amendments which I intend to offer.

The bill before us carries appropriations aggregating approximately $500,000,000. Appropriations are provided for the Executive Office, the Alien Property Custodian's office, the Civil Service Commission, the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the General Accounting Office, the Housing Corporation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Railroad Labor Board, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, the National Art Gallery; also for the care of State, War, and Navy Department buildings, temporary buildings, Interior Department buildings, as well as other public buildings within the District of Columbia, the Tariff Commission, the United States Shipping Board, the United States Veterans' Bureau, including vocational rehabilitation; also a number of other executive bureaus and agencies. A bill carrying such a colossal sum should receive careful consideration at the hands of the Senate; but I am constrained to say that too little attention has been bestowed upon this important measure. Insufficient information has been submitted and inadequate discussion has taken place. We pass the bill upon faith rather than knowledge, upon hopes that its provisions are fair and just rather than upon any satisfactory or sufficient evidence justifying such hopes.

As I am advised, there were no hearings before the Senate committee reporting this bill; and the House hearings found in a volume which I have before me will prove, in my opinion, disappointing to those who earnestly seek for facts justifying many of the provisions of this bill. I have examined the hearings, consisting of 450 pages, and feel compelled to state that the data therein contained do not justify some of the appropriations carried in the pending measure. In my opinion the appropriation bills passed by the Senate are not sufficiently scrutinized or discussed. It does seem to me that measures carrying not only hundreds of millions of dollars, but billions of dollars—measures which compel onerous taxation—should be carefully examined with a view to reducing the expenditures of the Government to the lowest possible figure. It has been my observation that appropriation bills receive less consideration than many measures of the most insignificant character. Federal agencies have been in the habit of preparing estimates calling for stupendous sums—indeed, for amounts greatly in excess of what efficient and economical administration required, and Congress has been too prone to accept their representations.

An examination of the statements submitted by representatives of departments and bureaus who appeared before committees will furnish convincing proof that in most instances the demands for appropriations are extravagant, and the interests of the taxpayers are utterly disregarded. Few of the Senators become acquainted with appropriation bills and have but limited information as to the aggregate amounts or the appropriations devoted to specific and limited objects. When appropriation bills are under consideration but few Senators are present, and of those present but a fraction evince interest in these important measures.

The appropriations for the coming fiscal year will quite likely approximate $4,000,000,000, and undoubtedly deficiency bills will be reported, because of the inadequate appropriations, huge as they will be, provided in the general supply bills.

Mr. President, I shall support the motion of the able Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] who seeks to reduce the appropriation of $50,000,000 for the Shipping Board to $30,000,000. As he has clearly pointed out, the $50,000,000, which his amendment attacks, does not comprise all that will be expended during the coming year by the Shipping Board. No one knows what its expenditures will be. It is quite likely that the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation will spend in the neighborhood of $100,000,000, and yet the value of the ships owned by the Government and controlled by the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation would scarcely sell for that amount in the markets of the world.

Mr. President, the history of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation furnishes a rather dark page in the history of this Republic. Perhaps no great Government project has ever been so inefficient and wasteful as the one projected and controlled by the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. As I stated, during the address of the Senator from Florida, there have been direct appropriations from the Treasury of the United States to the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation of more than $3,488,000,000.

We are now making by this bill a direct appropriation of $50,000,000 more. All that the Government has to show for this stupendous sum is 1,038 ships, nearly 400 of which are of but little if any value, some unsettled claims, and some real and personal property of uncertain value. The assets of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, as appear on page 305 of the House hearings, exclusive of the ships, amount to $135,450,219.21; but on the same page the liabilities are given as $66,725,662.39, exclusive of claims of construction contractors and claims arising from the requisitioning of vessels and admiralty claims, including claims in litigation and the United States Court of Claims, which aggregate $247,525,372.51. It is uncertain what portion of this vast sum classified as claims will be established as binding obligations against the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. It may therefore be said that it is doubtful whether the assets in the hands of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, aside from the fleet, will prove sufficient to meet the claims preferred against these organizations. Indeed, it would seem that without resort to the fleet there is not sufficient property in the hands of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation to discharge the obligations which they have incurred. It is doubtful, therefore, that out of the wreck a sufficient sum can be obtained to meet the obligations of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation without further appropriations from Congress or a sale of some of the vessels under the control of the Shipping Board. In my opinion the $50,000,000 directly appropriated by this bill for the Shipping Board will be lost and wasted and that further appropriations will be required, whether the ship subsidy bill shall be passed or not. This money is being thrown into the deep, as millions have heretofore been wasted in this enterprise. No one can foretell what the end of this costly adventure will be, nor can it be determined how much more will be squandered by the Government.

The present Shipping Board is not solving the problem, nor rescuing the enterprise from the abyss into which it has been plunged. It is merely spending money, disposing of assets, and applying them toward the payment of claims against the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. In addition it is receiving periodical contributions from the Federal Treasury, amounting to tens of millions of dollars annually, which are being absorbed in overhead expenses in carrying on the operations of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation and in paying obligations recognized as valid claims. When the present Shipping Board was appointed it was claimed that great reforms would be effectuated and a merchant marine established that would be the pride of the American people. Mr. Lasker complained of the mistakes which had been made by the Shipping Board and of the "mess" (to use his expression) which he found upon his hands. We were led to believe that economies would be practiced and that the moribund organization would be vitalized and saved.

An examination of such records as are available demonstrate that no lasting benefits have been derived from the present régime. It is true many claims have been settled and assets of the value of millions of dollars have been disposed of to accomplish that end. A number of ships have been sold and the proceeds derived therefrom have been applied to the payment of claims against the Shipping Board or to meet the expenses of its wasteful and inefficient administration. The assets of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation have continued to grow less; and it is quite likely that if no further appropriations were made and a liquidation of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation were effectuated, the Government would find itself with but few if any ships and a ledger account which would show a loss of nearly four and one-half billions of dollars.

The direct appropriation of $50,000,000 carried by this bill is not the final chapter in this wretched enterprise. Congress will be called upon to make further appropriations of millions and tens of millions of dollars. We are pursuing a foolish and fatuous policy. It is apparent that the ship subsidy bill is a smoke screen, a subterfuge to hide this colossal blunder made by the Government. Frantic efforts are being made by Mr. Lasker and representatives of the administration to convince the people that if the ship subsidy bill is passed, the American people will be compensated for the enormous sums which Congress has appropriated and to which I have referred. Time does not permit a discussion of the ship subsidy bill or the fallacy and deceptiveness of the contention to which I have alluded. Nothing, in my opinion, can save the situation. Congress should courageously deal with this problem and not continue along the highway which must inevitably result in further losses and to national humiliation. As stated, we are, by this bill, directly appropriating $50,000,000 to meet the losses that will result from the operations of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation for the next fiscal year.

On page 268 of the House hearings Mr. Lasker states that the "losses for the current fiscal year will come nearer to $50,000,000," and he also states that in figuring this amount neither interest, depreciation, insurance, permanent betterments, and so forth, are taken into account. And I might add that the annual depreciation of the vessels is a considerable part of their present value.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, first there will be the sum under the paragraph to which I have referred, then fifty millions specified, and in addition to that all the revenues derived from the operating of ships.

Mr. KING. In considering the operating expenses, or the charges of the Shipping Board for the coming year, I did not take into account, when I referred to the losses testified to by Mr. Lasker, of $50,000,000, the amount received from operations nor sums received from the sale of assets belonging to the corporation. Perhaps the entire amount to be expended by the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation for the coming year will be between seventy-five and one hundred millions of dollars. As I understand, the purpose is to make repairs upon ships and recondition others, and perhaps apply a considerable sum to construction purposes. It is impossible to determine what in the aggregate will be expended by the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, but with all their expenditures they will merely be draining the Treasury and depleting the resources of the corporation and diminishing the assets of the Shipping Board.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. What does the Senator suggest as a practical way to deal with this particular problem?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, any man will run considerable risk to his reputation in defining and declaring a definite policy dealing with this intricate and perplexing problem. I do not profess to have the information or the knowledge that would enable me to speak with any authority whatever. However, I have given considerable study to the subject, have read the testimony which has been submitted by those who favor a ship subsidy, and have reached the conclusion that their plan will not meet the situation or give to the country a merchant marine.

As I view the situation, it seems to me the first thing we should do is to abolish the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. These organizations, from the beginning, have been inefficient, inexcusably wasteful and extravagant and have pursued such a reckless course as to compel belief that they can not longer be trusted with the management of this enterprise. The power and authority of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation should be turned over to the Department of Commerce. I concede that there are objections to this course and the impediments seem very great, but I believe that the Department of Commerce will deal with the problems far more efficiently than will the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The Department of Commerce, if this course were pursued, should promptly terminate the MO–4 contracts and operate only such ships and upon such routes as will result in no loss to the Government. All claims against the Government should be promptly settled and those indebted to the Government should be compelled to make immediate settlement. The fleet should be placed in safe harbors, and the machinery properly cared for so as to not rust or deteriorate and then a policy should be announced that the Government would sell at reasonable rates any or all of its ships to be operated under the American flag. The public should be told that the prices fixed per ton for cetrain grades would not be lowered. Perhaps a price as low as $20 per ton should be fixed for some grades of the cargo ships and $30 per ton fixed as a maximum price. In my opinion, within a year all of the ships of any value could be sold. As I have indicated, a considerable part of the fleet is of no value.

At the end of a reasonable time whatever ships of any value on hand should be sold to the highest bidders, provided, of course, that the ships were to be employed under American registry. If the Government could do no better, after a reasonable time had expired, then, in my opinion, it should alocate to the shipowners of the United States the ships remaining or they should be turned over to those who would operate them under such reasonable and proper restrictions as the Government might impose.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, that is a practical proposition, and let me say to the Senator that if the ship subsidy bill fails I shall join with him in urging some such practical course.

Mr. KING. Permit me to say to the Senator that before the discussion upon the ship subsidy bill is concluded I shall offer for the consideration of the Senate a measure embodying some of the features which I have so imperfectly indicated.

Mr. President, the hour is approaching for a vote, so I can not further discuss the pending measure. I shall briefly call attention to one or two amendments which I intend to offer. I shall offer an amendment to the provisions dealing with the Shipping Board to the effect that any funds appropriated or made available shall not be used for the preparation and dissemination of any propaganda in favor of or in opposition to the ship subsidy.

A further amendment which I shall offer will restrict payments to lawyers employed by the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation to $250,000. Another amendment which I shall offer aims at the abolition of the recruiting service. I am told by Mr. Furuseth and others who are familiar with the matter that the recruiting service has been of no benefit whatever to the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Indeed, it has been employed by private shipowners and has been a distinct disservice to the seamen. The appropriation carried in the bill will furnish jobs to parasites who are in the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Their connection with the organization should be terminated. I have a number of amendments which I should like to offer to the Interstate Commerce Commission provisions of the bill; but having had no opportunity to explain them, and under the rule being denied such opportunity, I shall not tender them. I shall offer two amendments to the provisions carrying appropriations for the Civil Service Commission. The discussion in the Senate last Saturday demonstrated that so far as the selection of postmasters is concerned the activities of the Civil Service Commission are unimportant. The postmasters are selected because of their politics, not because of their qualifications. Republicans only are chosen, and it is sheer nonsense to make provisions to inquire into the character and qualifications of Republicans who are candidates for positions in the post-office service. Those receiving the approval of the Republican machine will be appointed regardless of any investigation or report made by the Civil Service Commission.

I could say much concerning what I believe to be the partisanship of some forces within the civil-service organization, but because my time is practically ended I can not offer any further observations. Before concluding I should like to ask my colleagues or the chairman of the committee if the testimony before them justifies the appropriation of such a large sum, to wit, $49,984,063, for overhead expenses in the Veterans' Bureau.

All Senators are desirous of appropriating whatever is necessary for vocational training and for the care of the sick and wounded and disabled and their dependents. Those who served their country and incurred disabilities should be generously treated. Moreover, every possible means should be adopted to expedite the consideration of claims made by veterans. There has been too much "red tape," too much delay, and, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas a few moments ago, thousands of disabled veterans have been unable to receive prompt treatment and that compensation to which they were entitled. I have sometimes felt that there were entirely too many officeholders and too much machinery. It seems to me that $50,000,000 overhead is too much, and I might add that an examination of the other provisions of the bill dealing with the Veterans' Bureau will reveal that very large sums in addition are to be paid to various persons and agencies engaged in the administration of the law. I believe that a careful investigation will demonstrate that there are too many incompetent employees and too much machinery—all of which militates against the veterans who seek and who are entitled to compensation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the question of the Senator is one that is to be settled by each Senator according to his judgment. I would gladly respond further to inquiries except for lack of time. As we are under agreement to vote soon, I do not wish to absorb time which I know the Senator from Utah expects to use. A moment ago the Senator referred to the matter of propaganda, and said he wished to prevent it. If he will look at the top of page 40 he will find that is already provided for. Commencing on page 39 the bill reads:

> No part of the funds appropriated or made available in this act for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be expended for the preparation, printing, publication, or distribution of any newspapers, magazines, journals, or other periodicals, or for services in connection therewith, not including, however, the preparation and printing of documents and reports authorized and required to be issued by law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that is to prohibit the institution of a publication, a journal, or a paper. It does not prohibit the engagement of space in magazines and like publications.

Mr. WARREN. It does not provide any money for doing that, except as to legal advertising, and so forth, in conducting its business.

Mr. FLETCHER. It prohibits them from establishing a paper or a journal.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the Senator if that would prohibit proper advertising?

Mr. WARREN. Anything that is authorized by law is not prohibited.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that the amount estimated for the purposes named by him was $55,063,000. The House cut that amount down from $55,063,000 to $49,984,063.

Mr. KING. I remind my colleague that the estimates of executive departments are very unsafe guides to be followed in legislation. We all know that most executive departments do not consider the taxpayer and the burdens resting upon him. They are interested in strengthening their own hands, increasing their power, and extending their authority. They are always demanding increased salaries and compensation and larger appropriations. I can only repeat that in the Veterans' Bureau we should have competent officials—those who are in sympathy with the veterans and who will expeditiously pass upon the various claims submitted for their consideration. In my opinion there are too many officeholders in the Veterans' Bureau who are eating up funds which ought to go to disabled soldiers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement debate is closed on the pending bill and amendments. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLECHER].

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think we had better have a quorum present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	McKinley	Sheppard
Ball	Gerry	McLean	Shortridge
Borah	Hale	McNary	Smith
Brookhart	Harreld	Moses	Smoot
Broussard	Harris	New	Spencer
Calder	Harrison	Nicholson	Swanson
Cameron	Heflin	Norbeck	Townsend
Capper	Johnson	Norris	Trammell
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Colt	Kellogg	Overman	Warren
Couzens	Keyes	Owen	Watson
Curtis	King	Pepper	Weller
Dial	Lenroot	Phipps	Williams
Ernst	Lodge	Pittman	Willis
Fernald	McCormick	Ransdell
Fletcher	McCumber	Reed, Pa.
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Robinson

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. POMERENE] on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WARREN. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Relative to the amount to be paid for the expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, on page 39, line 8, strike out "$50,000,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$30,000,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer the amendment, which I ask may be read, to cut down some of the $25,000 salaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 40, line 16, after the numerals "$11,000," strike out the remainder of line 16 and all of lines 17 and 18 in the following words:

except the following: Six at not to exceed $25,000 each and two at not to exceed $20,000 each.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Secretary read the paragraph in full, so we may understand the nature of the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 40, the paragraph reads as follows:

No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate per annum in excess of $11,000.

Then follow the words proposed to be stricken out:

except the following: Six at not to exceed $25,000 each and two at not to exceed $20,000 each.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask if it is in order for me to state at this time that the amendment would cut——

Mr. WARREN. It is not in order. No debate is in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I note that my pair, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], is absent. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and let my vote stand.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] which I transfer to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Ashurst	Fletcher	King	Robinson
Borah	George	McCumber	Sheppard
Brookhart	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Broussard	Harreld	Norris	Swanson
Capper	Harris	Overman	Trammell
Caraway	Harrison	Owen	Williams
Dial	Heflin	Pittman

NAYS—37.

Ball	Johnson	Moses	Spencer

Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kendrick	Pomerene	Underwood
Edge	Ladd	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	La Follette	Shields	Walsh, Mont.

So Mr. McKELLAR's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which I ask the Secretary to read, and also to read the paragraph in connection with it, in order that it may be understood by the Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The paragraph referred to reads as follows:

For expenses of the Alien Property Custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, as amended; including personal and other services and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference, and periodicals, supplies and equipment, and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $280,000.

In line 23 it is proposed to strike out the words—and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. McKELLAR. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). Making the same announcement in reference to the transfer of my pair as that previously made, I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as I previously made, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST. Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. I inquire if the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. HARRISON. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Ashurst	George	King	Sheppard
Borah	Harris	McKellar	Smith
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Trammell
Dial	Heflin	Overman
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen

So Mr. MCKELLAR's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Tennessee, who is on his feet——

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just going to say, if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will permit me, that I have a number of amendments to the bill, which have been printed, proposing to strike out appropriations for automobiles in various branches of the Government service which are used by subordinate officers or employees, as I believe, without authority of law. There is no use, however, in the Senate voting on all the amendments separately as I see it. I have offered two amendments, and the Senate by a large majority has voted them down. The Senate seems to be in favor of this extravagance continuing.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw the other nine amendments?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am willing that there shall be a viva voce vote taken on them. That will take but a moment. Let them all be voted down en bloc, if the Senate wishes. I will offer them all together.

Mr. WARREN. I hope that the Senator's amendments may be offered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to voting on the amendments en bloc? The Chair hears none.

The amendments offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] are as follows:

On page 5, line 2, insert the following:

"Provided further, That any passenger-carrying vehicle now in use by the office of the Alien Property Custodian shall be sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States."

On page 8, line 21, strike out all of line 21 after the word "bicycles" and all of line 22, and insert the following:

"Provided further, That all passenger-carrying vehicles now in the possession of such commission shall be sold as now provided by law and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States."

On page 13, line 15, strike out the proviso beginning on line 15 and ending on line 19. Also strike out in lines 22 and 23 the words "maintenance and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles."

On page 15, line 9, strike out in line 9 all after the word "service" and all of line 10, and, on page 17, line 6, insert the following:

"No part of the appropriations herein made shall be expended for passenger-carrying vehicles, and any passenger automobiles now in the hands of the Housing Corporation shall be sold as now provided by law and the proceeds covered into the Treasury."

On page 21, line 3, after the word "Laboratory" strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 4 down to and including the word "vehicle," and on line 9, on same page, insert the following: "Any passenger-carrying vehicle now in possession of this committee shall be sold as now provided by law and the proceeds covered into the Treasury."

On page 22, line 23, after the figures "$7,500," insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for passenger-carrying vehicles."

On page 26, line 14, strike out the following: "including maintenance, repair, exchange, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle to be used for official purposes only," and insert the following proviso after the figures $164,000 in line 17:

"Provided, That any motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles shall be sold as now required by law and the proceeds covered into the Treasury."

On page 42, line 2, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein made shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, operation, or repair of any passenger-carrying vehicle, and any such vehicles now owned or used by the Shipping Board shall be sold as now provided by law and the proceeds covered into the Treasury."

On page 42, line 18, strike out all after the word "investigations," and all of line 19, and all of line 20 down to the word "salaries," and on page 43, line 12, insert the following:

"All passenger-carrying vehicles now owned or in possession of the Veterans' Bureau shall be sold in the manner now prescribed by law and the proceeds covered into the Treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated or made available herein shall be used for the preparation or dissemination of any data, information, or propaganda in favor of or in opposition to the passage of proposed legislation; and no official or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall during office hours engage in such work, unless it be solely for the preparation of statements to be presented to a congressional committee or in response to requests from Senators or Members of the House of Representatives of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not more than $250,000 of said sum may be used in payment of the salaries and compensation of attorneys and legal advisers, whether regular or special, for the Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated or made available herein shall be used for recruiting service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed, in the clause making appropriations for additional employees for the civil service, to amend by striking out the proviso on page 6, from line 14 to line 18, both inclusive, as follows:

Provided further, That $40,000 of this amount may be expended only in connection with all expenses incident to investigations and research as to the character and training and experience of applicants for examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 8. Those lines read:

For examination of presidential postmasters, including travel, stationery, contingent expenses, additional examiners and investigators, and other necessary expenses of examinations. $32,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole, on line 8, page 39, to strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$30,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 39, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$30,000,000."

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Again announcing the absence of my colleague [Mr. POMERENE] and the transfer of my pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. MCCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	George	King	Robinson

So Mr. FLETCHER's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The reading clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 5, and 14.

That the House recede from its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 8, and 11, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "For temporary and auxiliary clerk hire and for substitute clerk hire for clerks and employees absent with pay at first and second class post offices and temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter resort post offices, $9,000,000: Provided, That $500,000 of this sum may be used for the purpose of completing the work of determining the cost to the department of handling the different classes of mail matter"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,222,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 7, 12, and 13.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,

KENNETH MCKELLAR,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CHAS. F. OGDEN,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask for the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan a question. There was one item in the bill as it passed the Senate that I am wondering about. What became of the item increasing the number of postal inspectors by 50?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The House agreed to the action of the Senate on that matter.

Mr. HARRISON. So the increase is there?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. About what is the total number of post-office inspectors now?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Five hundred and twenty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as Senators know, this is only a partial agreement. There were two items in the bill to which the House conferees could not agree, and they had to take them back to the House. I ask that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will appoint the same conferees.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up Order of Business 961, House bill 11939, known as the bank tax bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11939. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Let the title of the bill be stated.

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill has been read, and was discussed for two or three hours the other day. It is the bank tax bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11939) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to the committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. In subdivision (b) of section 5219, on page 3, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the word "State" and to insert after the word "tax" the words "imposed by a State or any agency thereof."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. I should like some explanation of the effect of the amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will explain the effect of the amendment. Subdivision (b) reads as follows:

In the case of a State tax on said shares the rate of taxation shall not be higher than the rate applicable to other moneyed capital employed in the business of banking—

And so forth. In some States they have a tax, known as a State tax, which is entirely separate from the municipal and other taxes. The intention of the bill was, of course, to include all taxes imposed by the State or its subdivisions, wherever the bank was taxed; and, to make the language perfectly clear, this amendment has been suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment. I move to strike out the proviso on page 4, commencing with line 1 and ending with line 5, and to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota offers another amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. At the top of page 4 it is proposed to strike out the proviso and to insert the following:

Provided, That whenever by any taxing district the shares in mercantile, manufacturing, or business corporations doing business therein are taxed, the rate applied by said taxing district to the shares in banking associations shall not exceed the average of the rates applied by it to the shares in such other corporations or to the shares of such of them as are taxed therein.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I will say to the Senate that this is substantially the amendment reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], but it was changed after consultation with him to make it perfectly clear that if no stocks were taxed then of course they would not be the basis for taxation of national banks.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. He has proposed an amendment, and I did not exactly catch the significance of it. I wish to call his attention to the fact that in the present proviso it is provided—

That said rate shall not exceed the average of the rates applied in said State to shares in mercantile, manufacturing, or business corporations.

It seems to me that the restriction herein provided would tend to impose a tax upon banks and mercantile associations on equal terms, when the Senator must know, as every other man here knows, that business and mercantile concerns and corporations do not come into the same class at all with banking institutions.

We have a law in our State, and doubtless the same applies to other States, limiting the amount of interest which can be charged by a banking corporation, because its assets necessarily are in the most liquid form possible, namely, in the form of money. They are loaning money, which is not a commodity whose value may fluctuate. Therefore, in my State we have a legal rate of interest of 8 per cent, with a possible limit, under certain conditions, of 9 per cent. We put no such limit as that upon any mercantile corporation, because the business in which they are engaged is one of more or less uncertainty. There is no such uncertainty in regard to a bank, when it is properly conducted under the ordinary laws of banking, except as to the taking of undue risks, and sometimes failing; but the percentage of failures is very small, while the history of mercantile concerns shows that 80 per cent of them fail. To put them in the same category with banking institutions, or putting the banking institutions in the same category with them, is scarcely the proper thing.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that, of course, that is only where the State taxes stocks of bank corporations. In some States the State does not tax the stock; it taxes the property on a different basis. In that event, it would not be the basis for the taxation of national banks.

Mr. SMITH. What is the object of taking the stock of a mercantile corporation and putting it in the same category with the stock of a banking corporation?

Mr. KELLOGG. We had hearings on this bill during last autumn many times before the Banking and Currency Committee, and they gave this matter very careful consideration. As I proposed the original bill, the provision was that banks were not to be taxed at a greater rate than other moneyed capital engaged in banking, but the committee, after very careful consideration, thought that there should be other and further limitations; that is, that where the States taxed the stock of such other corporations, the rate should not be higher on the bank stock than on the stock of other corporations. I think as a general thing manufacturing, mercantile, and business corporations make a greater rate than the banks do. At the same time, it was the committee's opinion that there ought to be some further limitation, that banking capital should not be separated in a class by itself, but that there should be included the stocks of other corporations where they were taxed in the local community, and this amendment of mine is simply to carry out the idea of the Banking and Currency Committee, which reported the original amendment. There is no such provision in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. SMITH. What is the nature of the amendment the Senator sent up to the desk?

Mr. KELLOGG. As originally drawn, the amendment was as follows:

Provided, That said rate shall not exceed the average of rates applied in said State to shares in mercantile, manufacturing, or business corporations doing business in said State, or in such of said corporations as are taxed therein.

There is not any average, because banks and all stocks are taxed in the particular community. There may be one rate in St. Paul, another rate in Fergus Falls, and another rate in Duluth, depending upon the rate of taxation in the municipality where the bank is situated. So it was thought wise that the provision with reference to average rates be stricken out, because that would require the taxing authority to average all the rates in all the communities of the State, and then place an average rate on banks, so that the bank in St. Paul, where the tax rate might be 3 per cent, would get off with 2½, because that might be the average rate in the State. In some places the rate might be 2 per cent, in other places 4 per cent, in others 3 per cent, and in others 2½ per cent, and to average them would not be fair to the local communities, and it was not really the idea the Banking and Currency Committee had in mind. The amendment is to make that perfectly clear.

Mr. SMITH. Right at that point I want to call the Senator's attention to subdivision 3, which the committee proposes in the following language:

The shares or the net income as above provided of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any State shall be taxed in the taxing district where the association is located, and not elsewhere.

Mr. KELLOGG. The old law has not been changed. That has always been the law for taxing national banks. Every bank is taxed in the place where the bank is located. This does not change the law in that respect at all.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator was speaking of municipalities. How would he provide where the stock of a bank that was taxed was held, for instance, in another city than that in which the bank was located? When the tax was laid and collected within a certain taxing district—there and nowhere else—how would you provide against the ownership of the shares being in another municipal district?

Mr. KELLOGG. The law has always been that bank stock is taxed where the bank is located, and the rate of taxation in that local community is the rate which has always been applied to the banks. That provision in the law is not changed by this amendment.

Mr. SMITH. My attention was called to this matter by a Member of the House, and he was solicitous about the fact that residents in a given State might own stock in another taxing district, and if the tax is to be laid and collected within the district where the institution is and the owner of the property lives in another community his community does not get the benefit of the tax.

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill as it passed the House contains the same provision and the old law contains the same provision. Bank stock has always been taxed where the association is located. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] calls my attention to the fact, on page 2 of the bill as it passed the House, section 2 provides:

That the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any State shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located and not elsewhere.

That has always been the rule, and it has worked very well, and the amendment which I offer is simply to make the local rate in the taxing district the basis for taxation of national banks.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator what explanation he has to make of the language on page 3, the sentence that begins on line 14?—

The legislation of a State taxing said shares, or including dividends derived therefrom in the taxable income of an owner or holder thereof, or taxing the net income of such associations.

The State has an option, as I understand it, of three methods by which it may legislate to tax these banks, first, taxing the shares, which we have already had explained, or including dividends derived therefrom in the taxable income of an owner or holder thereof. How about a man holding shares in North Carolina of a bank in South Carolina? What jurisdiction have we over his income? Does that mean anything at all? Is that an option at all?

Mr. KELLOGG. That provision was inserted by the Banking and Currency Committee because in the State of New York they tax the income from the bank shares, also the shares, and also the real estate. That was one of the reasons why the law was held in violation of the act of Congress. This legislation is to give the State the privilege of taxing the shares directly, as they are now taxed, of taxing the income of the bank, or taxing the income from the shares in lieu of the shares.

Mr. SMITH. I can understand how you could tax the net income of such an association, and I think that would be very fair and just. There you would get the net income and tax it at the place of its business, or you could tax its shares, as you have provided here, and collect at the place of its business. But on the second proposition, as it occurs here, "or including dividends derived therefrom on the taxable income of an owner," how would you provide for taxing the income of a North Carolinian who held shares of a bank in South Carolina?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is perfectly simple, because under the present law the banking association and its stock are situated in a certain town, and if the legislature has the power to tax a nonresident's stock there, it may tax the income of the stock there or the income of the bank there, and it is the simplest way of taxing national banks.

Mr. SMITH. I can understand the first and the last, but it says "including dividends derived therefrom in the taxable income of an owner or holder thereof." When my dividend is forwarded to me, that is my income. I can not lay a tax upon the property of a nonresident under such language as that.

Mr. KELLOGG. A nonresident who holds a certificate of stock and who lives in the State of New York may be taxed in the city of St. Paul. The State legislature provides that the bank shall deduct his tax from his income or from the earnings of the bank, and the legislature may provide exactly the same thing. They may deduct his tax from his income or from the earnings of the bank, exactly the same as they do with the bank shares. It is perfectly simple. It has always been the law, and I do not think we ought to introduce any more uncertainty into this matter than there is in it now.

Mr. SMITH. I do not see how it would be possible, if you are going to put it under the income, for one owning the shares of this bank residing in another State——

Mr. KELLOGG. It would be handled just exactly as they do it in New York. The bank deducts the income tax. The bank deducts the tax in Minnesota and charges it against its earnings. That is done in nearly all the States. It does not make any difference where a man lives or where he keeps his certificate of stock, which is, of course, personal property, the bank is charged with the tax, and it is the simplest way to impose the tax and to collect it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator's previous statement with regard to this bill. Will the Senator state to what extent the bill changes existing law?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly. Under existing law banks can not be taxed at a greater rate than that imposed on other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizen. In the decision in the City of Richmond case the court held that the imposition of a lower rate on the intangible money and credits of an individual than was imposed on a bank rendered the bank tax void, and this bill provides that the bank shall not be taxed at a greater rate than any other moneyed capital engaged in banking, with a proviso that in case stocks of manufacturing, mercantile, or business corporations are taxed in the local community, the tax on the bank stock shall not exceed the rate so imposed on other companies. That is the difference.

I will say to the Senator from Virginia that suits are being brought all over the United States to enjoin the collection of taxes which have been imposed and collected for years, and supposed to be valid, and in the city of New York alone the banks have recovered a judgment for all the taxes paid in 1920, 1921, and 1922, the court declaring the entire tax in violation of the act of Congress.

Mr. SWANSON. Was the committee unanimous in recommending this bill?

Mr. KELLOGG. The committee's report is unanimous; yes.

Mr. SWANSON. With a full attendance of the committee?

Mr. KELLOGG. The committee had many hearings on the bill. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] if the report was not unanimous?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, Mr President; it was the report of the entire committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Were the committee meetings fully attended and the matter fully discussed and considered?

Mr. PEPPER. With the permission of the Senator from Minnesota, I will say that the matter was referred, in the first instance, to a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], chairman, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and myself. We submitted our report to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The entire committee discussed the matter at great length, and the bill, in the form in which it was directed to be reported out, was reported out by unanimous vote of the entire committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Was the subcommittee unanimously in favor of the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. The subcommittee was unanimous.

Mr. KING. May I make an inquiry of the Senator from Pennsylvania? There was one amendment, I understand, either recommended by a few of the committee or with the understanding that it was to be offered upon the floor of the Senate, as to which there was not unanimity and which is perhaps the most important or one of the most important features of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. The statement I have just made has relation to the bill in the form in which it now appears upon the calenday. The bill as passed by the House contained a provision authorizing validating legislation by the States, which, I take it, is the matter to which the Senator from Utah refers. That, by the action of the committee, was eliminated from the bill of the House. It is understood that an amendment will be proposed to the bill now pending in the form of the validating provision to which the Senator from Utah refers.

Mr. SMITH. That has already been introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. It has been printed and is upon the desks of Senators.

Mr. PEPPER. I was not aware whether it had been presented or not. I knew it was intended to be introduced by the Senator from New York.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question? I have been unavoidably detained from the Senate. It is now after 5 o'clock. I have no intention of delaying action on the measure at all, but I ask him if he could not let it go over until to-morrow? There are certain features of it about which I would like to confer with certain of my colleagues before we pass the bill. I promise the Senator that if the matter which I wish to investigate is not worthy of bringing to the attention of the Senate I shall have nothing to say, but if it is I shall present it in the briefest manner possible.

Mr. KELLOGG. Has the Senator any objection to the pending perfecting amendment?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. KELLOGG. If we could vote on that particular amendment to the committee amendment, then the whole amendment of the committee would be before the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the amendment now offered by the Senator from Minnesota is an amendment that was unanimously agreed upon by the subcommittee and the full Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes. The language was clarified by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and myself, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who studied it over afterwards and changed the language somewhat. But the original amendment was reported by the unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the junior Senator from Virginia, my colleague [Mr. GLASS], is fully in accord with the bill as reported and the amendments offered.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understand that he is. He was present at all the discussions.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it proper to say, so far as I am concerned, in answer to the question of the Senator from Virginia, that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is entirely in accord with the bill as reported out by the committee. The specific amendment of the minor point which is now proposed by the Senator from Minnesota has not, so far as I am aware, been referred to the junior Senator from Virginia, but that amendment is in the nature of a clarifying amendment and does not, as I understand it, change the substance of the matter.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand the effect of the bill, if it becomes a law the States would be compelled to tax the banking capital or the income of national banks, not similar to the taxes on the capital and income of the State banks, but according to the taxes on mercantile and other established businesses.

Mr. KELLOGG. No; not entirely. It first provides that the rate of taxation on national banks shall not be greater than on other moneyed capital engaged in banking. That includes State banks, trust companies, private individuals engaged in banking, and all capital engaged in banking, with the privilege that in States where tax is levied on stocks of certain other corporations the rate shall be no greater than that imposed on the stocks of mercantile and manufacturing business corporations.

Mr. SWANSON. What is the objection to letting the law provide that the tax on capital and income of national banks shall be similar to the tax on capital and income of State banks?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is not the law now. If that were the law now I would be perfectly willing to leave it there.

Mr. SWANSON. What is the objection to having the law so provide?

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no objection to that. The committee thought that private individuals engaged in banking ought to be required to pay the same rate as a State bank, and that a trust company should be required to pay the same rate as a State bank. I think the committee was right. Therefore it was provided that the rate upon banks should not be greater than on other moneyed capital engaged in banking, and that includes State banks, trust companies, and private banking institutions.

Mr. SWANSON. That does not include mercantile capital?

Mr. KELLOGG. The committee put that amendment in after long deliberation. The committee thought it was not wise to single out banking capital alone, but that there ought to be some other proviso. That proviso was added and the amendment which I offer simply seeks to clarify that provision.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, right on the question the Senator is discussing, I want to call attention to the proviso at the top of page 4 and also to subdivision (c). It may be it has been sufficiently explained, but I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that he has been in the front of the Chamber and there has been so much confusion in the back of the Chamber that I have not been able to hear more than half of what he said. I am interested in the measure.

I would like to know why subdivision (c) or the provision at the top of page 4 is at all necessary. As I understand the object of the legislation, and I am in hearty accord with it, it is to provide that national banks shall by States be taxed the same as State banks.

Mr. KELLOGG. That was not the object of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that enough?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think it is enough.

Mr. NORRIS. In subdivision (c) it is provided that—

> In the case of a State tax on the net income of an association the rate shall not be higher than the highest of the rates imposed by the taxing State upon the net income of mercantile manufacturing and/or financial corporations doing business within its limits.

It seems to me if a State taxes its State banks and the stock or the income from the State bank differently from what it taxes a mercantile establishment, then it ought to tax a national bank differently. I can not understand why we should compel the State to tax a banking institution the same as it would a manufacturing institution. The State at least ought to have liberty to make a difference if it sees fit. If our national banks are handled and taxed the same as State banks, that is all, it seems to me, that we ought to require or that we ought to permit.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that under the old law, the act of Congress of 1864 as amended in 1868, which I explained the other day in opening discussion on the bill, it was provided that national banks should not be taxed at a greater rate than other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizen—not State banks, not trust companies, but simply moneyed capital in the hands of individuals.

Mr. SMITH. Right there, did it not say in the hands of the individual coming in competition with a national bank?

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the State should decide to do so——

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope Senators will talk one at a time so that I may understand them.

Mr. NORRIS. Why should not a State be allowed to decide on different kinds of rates on different kinds of business? One of the modern things that tax reformers are trying to get in constitutional provisions is one declaring that business should be classified for taxation purposes. Suppose they should say that a manufacturing establishment engaged in the manufacture of fertilizer should be taxed at one-half the amount that a manufacturing establishment engaged in some other business should be taxed. Whether that is right or not, whether we think it is right or not, that is within the province of the State, or ought to be within its taxing power. They might want to tax capital engaged in the banking business at a higher rate than they would tax capital engaged in the agricultural business——

Mr. KELLOGG. They can do that already.

Mr. NORRIS. Or in the grocery store or hotel business. They want to classify it. Why should they not be allowed to do that, and why should not we be satisfied as a national bank if they classify us the same as they do other banks? If they tax the national banks high, they have to tax the State banks low; and if they tax them low, the national banks would get the benefit of it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know whether the Senator was present when I explained the bill the other day.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not present, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that the law of 1864, as amended in 1868, gave permission for the States to tax national banks, and provided that they should not be taxed at a greater rate than other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual was taxed. Now, just as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] said, there grew up in the various States different systems of taxation. Many States amended their constitutions so as to do away with the old hard-and-fast rule of uniform valuation and rate of taxation. They found it was impracticable. They found that money and credits, intangible assets in the hands of individuals, could not be taxed by a direct rate of taxation. In the first place, they would not report them, and in the second place, they did not have them when the taxing day came.

The result was that in my State, for instance, we used to get $350,000 a year from a direct taxation. We put a 3-mill-per-dollar tax on intangible assets, such as money and credits, and got $1,350,000. In 18 or 20 States they have substituted systems of taxation. Some tax the income, some tax the money and credits at a 3 or 4 or 5 mill rate. They have always taxed banks at the local rate, the same as real estate and other tangible property has been taxed.

The Supreme Court of Virginia held that where the money and the credits of the individual came in competition with banks, they could not tax the banks at a greater rate, and held the tax void. So I introduced a bill in Congress to provide that banks should not be taxed at a greater rate than other moneyed capital engaged in banking.

That includes State banks, trust companies, and private individuals which really come in actual competition with national banks. I think that is fair. I do not think the States ought to single out national banks and tax them higher than they do other moneyed capital; but the House did not pass the proposed legislation in that form and would not do so. The House, however, passed the bill which is now before the Senate, which, in my opinion, in the form as passed by that body would give no relief whatever, because it merely provides that the States shall not tax national banks at a greater rate than they tax other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens coming in competition with banks. That is now the law, because the Supreme Court of the United States has held that only money and credits in the hands of individuals coming into competition with banks are the basis of the taxation of national banks.

The matter came before a subcommittee of the Senate consisting of the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Many hearings were held, and the question was thoroughly discussed. The subcommittee made its report to the full committee, and the full committee considered it. I spent a couple of days with the full committee discussing the question. The full committee thought that there should be a further protection. First, the committee reported that the Government ought to allow the States to tax the stock of the banks or the income of the banks or the income of the stock. In some States there is an income tax on corporations, while in others there is a direct tax upon corporations. The committee thought it wise to give the States the same privilege of taxing national banks on their income or on their stock or on the income from the stock.

Mr. SWANSON. If I understand the Senator, the effect of the bill is that the States shall have the privilege of taxing national banks provided they will impose similar taxes on the State banks and comply with the conditions which are set forth in the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is practically the proposition.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, it is proposed to use the power of the Federal Government to compel the States to change the system of taxation in connection with State banks to conform with the tax on the national banks, or else the State may not impose a tax on national banks. Is that true?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; the point is that there is a limitation. The States must not tax national banks at a higher rate than they tax other moneyed capital which is engaged in banking. That includes State banks and trust companies.

Mr. SWANSON. That would be all right if the bill stopped there, but it goes further and proposes to coerce all the States into changing their methods of taxation of State banks and other financial institutions by providing that the States shall not impose a tax on national banks in excess of the tax which they impose on mercantile corporations.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator from Virginia is wrong, because that is the law now. The States may not tax national banks at a higher rate than they tax State banks where the State bank is operated by individuals.

Mr. SWANSON. Then the only effect of this proposed legislation, if enacted, would be to say to the State: "You may tax a national bank, provided you do not tax such a bank more than you tax mercantile establishments in your State; and if you tax your State banks more than you tax mercantile establishments you must conform the two rates, or else there will be discrimination." Is that the effect of the proposed legislation?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know that I understand the Senator from Virginia. The State banks, the trust companies, and the individuals who are engaged in banking will have to pay taxes at the same rate that the national banks would pay. That is fair, is it not?

Mr. SWANSON. I think the national banks ought only to pay the same as the State banks do.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is what I have stated.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator says they ought to pay the same tax, but the bill provides that a national bank shall not pay any more tax than a mercantile establishment pays. In order to accomplish that result it would be necessary, it seems to me, to change the tax laws in nearly all of the States.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator can secure the passage of a bill through the House of Representatives without some such clause as is contained in this bill, I should like to have him do it.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know as to that, but I merely wish to ascertain what the effect of this proposed legislation would be.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the bill which passed the House of Representatives is before me, and on the very point now under discussion the bill as it passed the other House provides:

That the tax imposed shall not be at a greater rate than that assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals of such State coming into competition with the business of national banks.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does that give the States any protection?

Mr. SMITH. It defines what comes in competition with the national banks and does not include any outside business. It means capital that is used for the purposes approximating those of a banking business.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; it includes the individual's investment.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to suggest to the Senator that, in view of the language which is embraced in the pending bill, we might find it necessary to change the tax laws of nearly every State in the Union. I merely wish to ascertain whether or not that is true. I read from page 4, line 6, clause (c), as follows:

(c) In the case of a State tax on the net income of an association the rate shall not be higher than the highest of the rates imposed by the taxing State upon the net income of mercantile manufacturing and/or financial corporations doing business within its limits.

Mr. KELLOGG. That applies where the States levy a direct tax on net income.

Mr. SWANSON. That provision seems to me to place a manufacturing establishment and a financial corporation on the same basis, whether the present State law does it or not.

Mr. KELLOGG. At present the banks are not taxed on their income at all; but the committee thought it wise that the States should be permitted, if they saw fit, to tax the income of banks instead of taxing the stock of banks, and that therefore there must be some limitation. The committee reported a provision that the rate on the income of banks should not be higher than the rate upon mercantile, manufacturing, or banking corporations doing business within the State. That would include all financial corporations such as banks, trust companies, and so forth.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, let me see if I understand that clearly. If there is no tax levied by the State upon business concerns such as are indicated in the paragraph, then this provision would not apply? Is that right?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is true. If the States do not tax the stock of other corporations, of course the proviso at the top of page 4 would not apply, for there would be a different basis of taxation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, is not the Senator willing now to let the bill go over until to-morrow? It is getting late and some of us are not prepared to go on with it now. There are certain questions in connection with the bill which I should like to investigate before the bill shall be passed.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am willing, then, that the bill shall go over.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest, since the Senate has decided to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, that we ought not to be kept here any longer to-day.

PROBLEMS RELATING TO REFORESTATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] has a bill which is short, and I do not think will involve any discussion. I am perfectly willing that he should have an opportunity to ask unanimous consent that his bill may be considered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator from Mississippi has a brief resolution, for which he would also like to secure consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on Friday last the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] reported to the Senate a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee to investigate problems relating to reforestation. At the instance of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who had not seen the resolution, it went over until the next day. The Senator from Idaho is in favor of the resolution, and I know of no objection to it. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The Secretary will state the resolution.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Order of Business 999, Senate Resolution 398, to investigate problems relating to reforestation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the resolution propose an inquiry by a joint congressional committee?

Mr. HARRISON. No; it is merely a Senate resolution, and authorizes the Vice President to appoint a committee of five to investigate the problems of reforestation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that the entire resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution, and there being no objection, the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

The resolution had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses with amendments on page 1, line 10, after the word "than," to strike out "December 2" and insert "April 4," and on page 2, line 2, after the words "excess of," to strike out "$1.25 per printed page" and insert "25 cents per folio," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate appoint a committee to consist of five Members of the Senate, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, to investigate problems relating to reforestation, with a view to establishing a comprehensive national policy for lands chiefly suited for timber production in order to insure a perpetual supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States. The committee shall make a final report of its investigations with recommendations to the Senate not later than April 4, 1924. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act at such times during the sessions or recesses of the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses and in such places within the United States, to hold such hearings, and to employ such clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per folio. The committee is further authorized to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to take testimony. The expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SHIPMENT OF FILLED MILK IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8086) to prohibit the shipment of filled milk in interstate or foreign commerce. The bill passed the House of Representatives by a large majority; there has been a hearing before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture; two amendments have been added, one for the purpose of clarification and the other to make sure that the bill shall not include certain other foods which were not intended to be included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota for the immediate consideration of the bill named by him?

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] is desirous that the bill should not be considered during his absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LADD. I was not aware there was any objection on the part of the Senator from South Carolina. I knew that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] had stated that he reserved the right to discuss the measure and to have a vote on it in the Senate, but the Senator from Mississippi informed me that he had looked into the matter and would offer no objection. I also understood that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] had some objection to the bill, but I told him that I was about to ask for its consideration and he said he was not going to bother with it, and he left about two moments ago, so I take it he has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. GERRY. I am not especially familiar with the provisions of the bill, but I have information that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] desires to be present when it is considered and, out of courtesy to that Senator, I do not think the bill ought to be considered until he is present, especially at this late hour.

Mr. LADD. If there is objection to the bill I will withdraw the request.

Mr. GERRY. I object to the immediate consideration of the bill in the absence of the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

INDIANS OF MESCALERO RESERVATION, N. MEX.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up Order of Business 991, House bill 6294, promoting civilization and self-support among the Indians of the Mescalero Reservation in New Mexico. This is a bill that has been passed by the House. The Senate passed a similar bill, appropriating for the Apache Indians $250,000, to be repaid by the sale of timber. The House passed another bill which provides simply for the authorization of the appropriation, and it is that bill which I desire to call up at this time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. When does the Senator expect to get this appropriation?

Mr. BURSUM. It must go to the Budget.

Mr. LENROOT. It will not be until next year?

Mr. BURSUM. No; they expect to get something on the next deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not believe that we should have the practice of calling up bills when Senators do not expect them to be called up, unless there is some emergency in the case. I think it a very bad practice to call up just ordinary bills at all times. We have stated times for the calling of the calendar. I do not see that this bill will be injured in the least by awaiting the regular call of the calendar.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, if the Senator please, the secretary of the Indian Rights' Association told me that the bureau was very anxious to have this bill passed at this time, for the reason that it would give them an opportunity to get a part of this appropriation on the deficiency bill that is coming up in two or three weeks.

Mr. LENROOT. There will be plenty of time to pass this bill before then.

Mr. BURSUM. I shall be very glad to bring it up when there is a full Senate present.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not make reference to the Senator's bill. I simply think that unless there is some emergency it is a very bad practice.

Mr. LODGE. We are to have a calendar day to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 23, 1923, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Lord, we would incline our hearts toward Thee; we come in the multitude of Thy mercies, so free, so full, and so divine. We bless Thee for the priceless boon of liberty bequeathed by our fathers. Truly Thou hast not dealt so with any other nation. Magnify Thyself in human weakness. We believe that it is Thy pleasure to do so. Directed by Thee, may we be able to comprehend our whole duty toward our fellow citizens, who have called us. May our President and his hearthstone be under Thy fostering care. Guide our statesmen, and through the masses of our people, down to the wanderer on the street, let Thy blessing come for the enrichment, the strength, and the stability of our country. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 20, 1923, and of Sunday, January 21, 1923, was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the legislative appropriation bill, on which the previous question was ordered, and the bill has been read the third time. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas offers a motion to recommit the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WINGO moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendment: At the end of the bill add a new paragraph, to read as follows: "No part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used for the purpose of purchasing by or through the stationery room articles other than stationery and office supplies essential to and necessary for the conduct of public business, nor shall any part of such funds be expended for the maintenance, storage, or care of private vehicles."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Minnesota move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 3.

So the motion to recommit was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, was not the motion to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I report back the legislative bill (H. R. 13926) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, with the following amendment: At the end of the bill add a new paragraph, to read as follows:

No part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used for the purpose of purchasing by or through the stationery room articles other than stationery and office supplies essential to and necessary for the conduct of public business; nor shall any part of such funds be expended for the maintenance, storage, or care of private vehicles.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized.

ADDITIONAL POLICE DURING MYSTIC SHRINE CONVENTION.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, with the statement that it is the desire of the Committee on the District of Columbia that the compensation bill shall not lose its status as unfinished business, I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate Joint Resolution 247.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to call up the Senate joint resolution which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 5, 6, and 7, 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us hear what the resolution is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable in the same proportion as other expenses of the government of the District of Columbia are now paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the revenues of the United States, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in the District of Columbia from the 25th day of May, 1923, to the 10th day of June, 1923, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services; the payment of allowances; traveling expenses; hire of means of transportation; and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the said commissioners, and authority is hereby given to use so much of said sum as may be necessary for the construction, rent, maintenance, and for incidental expenses in connection with the operation of temporary public convenience stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, including the employment of personal services in connection therewith during said period.

SEC. 2. That said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure the preservation of public order and the protection of life and property and the fixing of fares to be charged by public conveyances, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movement, and operating of public vehicles in the District of Columbia during the period hereinbefore mentioned, and to fix the fares to be charged for the use of the same. Such regulations shall be in force during said period, and shall be published in one or more daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the expiration of said period shall not prevent the arrest or trial of any person for any violation of such regulations committed during the time same were in force and effect: Provided, however, That no penalty prescribed for the violation of any such regulations shall be in force until five days after the date of publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable to a fine not to exceed $100 for each offense, and prosecution for same shall be instituted in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel of said District or any of his assistants.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

On page 2, line 6, after the word "Commissioners," strike out the comma and the remainder of the line and all of lines 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and insert: "There is hereby further appropriated the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable as aforesaid, for the construction, rent, maintenance, and for incidental expenses in connection with the operation of temporary public-convenience stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, including the employment of personal services in connection therewith during such period."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not know who is the author of this resolution. As I caught the reading of it, it would authorize the District Commissioners to bring men from Texas here to serve as policemen and pay their mileage, and so forth. Is that a part of the resolution as I understand it?

Mr. FOCHT. It is in their judgment. It is not likely that they would find many crooks down in Texas or that the money would hold out.

Mr. GARNER. It seems like a junketing tour for a lot of men from Texas and California. I do not think it is wise to leave to the commissioners the exercise of this discretion. I think you can get all the policemen you need right here in the District of Columbia without going outside.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman in charge of the resolution yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It merely embraces this idea: For instance, in a big city like Chicago or Philadelphia or Pittsburgh or New York their local detectives are acquainted with the thugs of those cities. They know them. Now, it was the idea of the Commissioners of the District that if they could have the police departments of the various big cities send here to Washington one or more of their detectives who are familiar with the local thugs and lawbreakers it would help materially in the enforcement of law and order. That is all that the idea embraces, I will say to my colleagues.

Mr. FOCHT. It is the customary resolution that is adopted on the occasion of inaugurations and other unusual gatherings in Washington.

Mr. GARNER. It does not seem to me that this is necessary, and I think it is bad practice to pay the expenses of individuals to come here from Seattle, in the State of Washington, or San Francisco, or San Antonio, Tex. I protest against it.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand this is for the annual gathering of the Shriners?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. You do not need any policemen for the Shriners.

Mr. FOCHT. It is to protect them.

Mr. TINCHER. If there is any body of men in the world who can protect themselves, it is the Shriners.

Mr. FOCHT. The request comes from them.

Mr. TINCHER. Are they going to appoint Shriners as policemen?

Mr. FOCHT. I believe some of them are to be Shriners.

Mr. TINCHER. If they will appoint all Shriners, I have no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think there is a little misunderstanding in the minds of some gentlemen as to the nature of this request. The purpose in the bringing of these policemen or detectives here from other cities is not to watch the Shriners, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] undoubtedly well knows and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] also. But wherever there is a large gathering of people there is sure to be a following of those who want to prey on them in the way of thievery—pickpockets and lawbreakers of that nature. As I understand it, there are to be something over 500,000 people here the first week in June. It is an honor to the United States to have the Shrine select the National Capital as its place of meeting, and the local authorities, as I understand it, have asked this extra protection to the District itself. If there are special detectives in the gentleman's home State of Texas who know certain men to be crooks, who are accustomed to follow where some large gathering is to be held, it is very right and proper that the authorities of the District should ask such detectives to come here to help protect, not alone the people who are coming to this convention but the people of the District. The same thing applies everywhere throughout the country.

It is not a junketing trip for certain special detectives, but it is an effort on the part of the Commissioners of the District properly to protect the District and the visitors to it.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman think that other cities in the country except Washington have to resort to this practice in order to protect the public on occasions of this kind?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am credibly informed that that is the usual practice.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think it may be partly due to the utter inadequacy of the police force in Washington either to protect the public or anybody else?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the police force in Washington is inadequate to protect the public, Congress is to blame for it. We legislate for the District; and not admitting the premise of the gentleman from New York, if his premise is correct we are responsible for it, and we ought to do our part to overcome the difficulties that may arise as the result of such a situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that the serious proposition involved here is the appropriation out of the Federal funds. The city of Washington, of course, is attractive to conventions. The Shriners accepted an invitation extended, I believe, through the chamber of commerce of the city of Washington, to hold their next annual meeting here. There is a necessity, no doubt, for extra police protection on account of the extraordinary size of the crowd that will attend, but this bill, so far as I know, will fix a precedent of the Federal Government paying out of its funds an allowance for a wholly nongovernmental function. It seems to me that if this were confined wholly to the District revenues there would be no objection to it; but whenever you begin to have expenses incurred on account of conventions paid out of the Federal Treasury, it seems to me it will establish a bad precedent.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. It is assumed that there will be 100,000——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Five hundred thousand.

Mr. BLANTON. It is assumed that there will be 100,000 Shriners here who will have to camp in their automobiles in the city, leaving their cars and their contents in the daytime and at night down in the campers' district. It is further estimated that there may be at least 100,000 more who will have to live in Pullman cars here on sidetracks. I am with the gentleman on restricting District expenditures to District revenues, but, as a matter of fact, the chairman of this committee is not dependent upon unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution. It was voted out of the committee, and he is authorized as a matter of right to call it up at this time, and he can so call it up if he wants to. I do not know why he asked unanimous consent when he had the right to call it up.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not charge of the time, but if permitted, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. There seems to be a movement to make this a convention city. Does the gentleman think it would really be very serious if from time to time the Federal Government should help out the city when there was going to be an exceptionally large crowd by providing for extra police?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do, except when such convention or congregation is on governmental business, like, for instance, the inauguration of the President.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, these gatherings are not on governmental business except at the time of the inauguration of the President.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When it is for the inauguration of the President or something relating to Government business, I do not object to Federal participation in the expense; but I do think that when you undertake to make this a convention city and then appropriate for police protection out of the funds of all the people it is a mistake, and if it takes unanimous consent, I shall object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

Mr. FOCHT. Did the gentleman from Tennessee say he was going to object?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I shall object to unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order, which is: Is there objection to the consideration of this joint resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until I can make a statement?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will withhold it for that purpose.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman has overlooked the fact that the Congress of the United States in controlling and directing the affairs of the District of Columbia assumes the function of a town council or city council. I happened once to be chairman of a joint committee appointed under Governor Pennypacker, and with the cooperation of Vance McCormack, from Harrisonburg, we divided the cost of the protection and brought relief from New York, Chicago, and other cities to protect the people.

Mr. QUIN. Can not you call the bill up anyway?

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 247.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. The District of Columbia Committee has some unfinished business. Is it in order as a matter of priority to call up a new bill rather than to proceed with the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The District Committee has entire discretion as to what business it will call up.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. HERRICK. I object.

Mr. FOCHT. I renew my motion, Mr. Speaker, and pending that I move that all debate be limited to 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

The motion of Mr. FOCHT to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to; accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 5, 6, and 7, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I think the object and purpose of this resolution has been fully stated and is thoroughly well understood. It is not an unusual thing. Anyone who lives in a capital city knows that this is nothing extraordinary, that it has been followed always in this city. I do not know that I have anything further to say except that we have provided for an increase over the amount allowed by the Senate, for the reason that since the resolution was introduced way back last year the Masonic fraternity has information that instead of having 100,000 people here there will be 500,000. So the necessity of this has grown and will grow. Of the $50,000 40 per cent will be paid by the Government and 60 per cent by the Masonic fraternity as their share. It is not a case of rushing to the Treasury for funds when the Masonic fraternity pays 60 per cent of the amount. Besides that, as I understand, the business men have raised half a million dollars for the entertainment of these people. We are going to have them here, and we ought to protect them from the crooks, pickpockets, second-story men, and thugs from Chicago, Buffalo, New York, and Philadelphia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN].

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is the usual resolution that has been adopted for the presidential inauguration. It is my understanding that this convention will bring to the city of Washington half a million people, who will spend approximately $30,000,000. I think the objection raised to the bill by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is well founded, and I am sure no taxpayer of the District would oppose an amendment providing that the District shall pay the entire cost of properly policing the city as provided in the bill. As one of the proponents of this measure, I am quite in accord with the position taken by the gentleman from Tennessee, and I am sure the chairman of the committee would accept an amendment that the whole $50,000 carried in the resolution be paid out of the revenues of the District and not any part of it out of the revenues of the Federal Government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope I made myself perfectly clear, and I think I did, to the gentleman from Maryland by what he has said. I think it is necessary to have a fund for police protection for this great convention. But what I fear is that if a part of it is paid out of the Government funds; in other words, if the 60–40 proposition is to prevail, it will be an invitation to all sorts of orders everywhere, no matter what the character or the kind of the order, to hold their conventions in the city of Washington, 40 per cent of the protection to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. Congress had nothing to do with inviting the meeting here; it was invited by local and private authority.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. As I understand the gentleman from Tennessee, if the resolution was amended so that the whole $50,000 be paid entirely out of the revenues of the District he would have no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. None whatever.

Mr. FOCHT. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman of the committee will accept that proposition and will offer an amendment at the proper time that no part of the fund shall come out of the Federal Treasury. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think any gentleman here will oppose the resolution when the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and which is to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is adopted. It is a good amendment. It is estimated that there will be 500,000 Shriners visiting here in Washington. The gentleman from Maryland said they would spend $30,000,000. They will more likely spend $50,000,000 or more in this city. There will be hardly a Shriner who will spend less than $100 on an average. That would be $50,000,000. From an economic standpoint the city could well afford to pay this little expense. I am with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] in his amendment suggested. It ought to be adopted in this case and in every other bill of this character. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, it is worth while taking any further time on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable in the same proportion as other expenses of the government of the District of Columbia are now paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the revenues of the United States, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in the District of Columbia from the 25th day of May, 1923, to the 10th day of June, 1923, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services, the payment of allowances, traveling expenses, hire of means of transportation, and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the said commissioners, and authority is hereby given to use so much of said sum as may be necessary for the construction, rent, maintenance, and for incidental expenses in connection with the operation of temporary public convenience stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, including the employment of personal services in connection therewith during said period.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "commissioners," strike out the comma and all of line 6, and all of lines 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and insert the following: "There is hereby further appropriated the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable as aforesaid, for the construction, rent, maintenance, and for incidental expenses in connection with the operation of temporary public-convenience stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, including the employment of personal services in connection therewith during such period."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment, but I am willing to reserve it for a moment. I presume that it will be entirely satisfactory to the chairman of the committee to amend that and provide simply for an authorization, as is the case with the $50,000?

Mr. FOCHT. That is correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. If that is so, I withdraw the point of order and offer an amendment to the amendment to insert at the beginning of line 13, before the word "appropriated," the words "authorized to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 13, before the word "appropriated," insert the words "authorized to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] purposes to move to strike out in lines 5 and 6 the phrase "in the same proportion as other expenses of the Government in the District of Columbia are now paid," and also in lines 7 and 8 the phrase "and the revenues of the United States." I direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that you are providing an additional appropriation which would require another limitation, if the money is going to be paid out of the funds of the District of Columbia alone. Would it not be better in view of the general understanding that these appropriations are to be paid exclusively by the District of Columbia, to amend the language which has been recommended stricken out by the committee and insert in lines 7 and 8 the words "and authority is hereby given to use so much of said sum, not exceedingly $4,000, for the construction," and so forth?

Mr. FOCHT. It already provides that so much as may be necessary may be used?

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman is not getting my idea. If we are going to have all of these funds paid out of the District moneys, it would be better legislative practice, would it not, to insert the language in this phraseology which has been recommended to be stricken out?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hardly think so, if the gentleman will permit. If the first section of the bill is amended in accordance with what I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania will offer, providing that it shall be payable wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, then no amendment to this part would be necessary, because it says, "payable as aforesaid."

Mr. CRAMTON. That saves the situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FOCHT: Page 1, line 5, after the word "payable," strike out the remainder of line 5 and all of line 6 up to and including the word "paid," and in line 7, after the word "Columbia," to strike out the remainder of the line and all of line 8 up to and including the word "States."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the language reported as it would be if the amendment be agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the language as it will read if the amendment were agreed to.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

So that the paragraph will read:

"The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable from the revenues of the District of Columbia, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia," etc.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That should be "payable wholly" out of the District of Columbia, and I offer that as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "payable," insert the word "wholly."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the resolution back with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 247, authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 5, 6, and 7, 1923, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the joint resolution as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FOCHT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10034) creating the District of Columbia insurance fund for the benefit of employees injured and the dependents of employees killed in employments, providing for the administration of such fund by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and making an appropriation therefor. Pending that, I ask the Speaker to state to the House the condition of the time for general debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the time in favor of the bill was controlled by the chairman and the time against by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL]. There remains 18 minutes to those in favor of the bill and 32 minutes to those against it. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10034.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill 10034, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10034, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10034) creating the District of Columbia insurance fund for the benefit of employees injured and the dependents of employees killed in employments, providing for the administration of such fund by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will ask the Chair to notify me when I have used 15 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I have asked that I be notified when I have consumed 15 minutes of the time to which I am entitled, and I have asked for that length of time that I may answer questions from the Members who may be interested in this bill, but first I want to emphasize three or four points regarding the bill. I can not emphasize too strongly the fact that I am absolutely in favor of workman's compensation, as my record will show in the Massachusetts Legislature in behalf of the compensation law which has worked to the advantage of the State, of the manufacturers, and of the workmen, perhaps better than the experience of any other State in the Union. In the second place, I want to emphasize that I am unalterably opposed to the Government of the United States going into business, either the insurance business or any other business. The experience which we have had with the Government running private business has not been of such a character as to commend itself either to the Members of Congress or to the taxpayers of the country. I think perhaps the interests of the taxpayer are fully as important as the interest of any portion of our people, due to the fact that they pay the running expenses of the Government. My bill, known for convenience as the Underhill bill, which in due season I shall ask be substituted for the Fitzgerald bill, gives to the workmen every privilege, every advantage, every safeguard that is given by the Fitzgerald bill. In no way or manner can it be shown that the Fitzgerald bill is any more liberal to the workmen than the Underhill bill, but there is this fundamental difference: That the Fitzgerald bill provides for a Government bureau and an exclusive governmental insurance organization and excludes from competition any insurance companies now doing business either as stock companies or as mutuals.

I hold no brief for the insurance companies; I hold no stock in them; I have no interests or relatives who are interested in them; but I do believe insurance companies are just as much entitled to carry on business in the United States as the lawyers or the physicians or any other class of professional or trades people, and this is just another step in the direction of establishing another bureau in Washington, and if it only applied to workmen's compensation I doubt if I should take the time or trouble to fight this proposition. But it was acknowledged on the floor of this House by the author of the bill known as the Fitzgerald bill, and urged by the gentleman from New York, who is the only socialist in this body, that it was only a beginning, and that the true purpose was eventually to nationalize all insurance in the United States—life insurance, fire insurance, liability insurance, burglar insurance, all lines of insurance. Now, there is not a man in this body but who is acquainted with some insurance agent, somebody engaged in the insurance business, somebody who has come to him to solicit business, and showed him the advantages of protection. There is not a man here but who knows there are at least a half million people in this country engaged in the legitimate business of soliciting and writing insurance. I doubt if the same amount of work could be carried on by double the number of governmental employees. We have already had some experience with one line of insurance which the Government instituted and tried to carry on; that is the veterans' life insurance or the war risk insurance. I do not believe there is a man here whose experience with that bureau would lead him to desire a further extension into this private business. You will be told that the State fund is cheaper than the stock or mutual companies, and I agree that it is cheaper, not so cheap as the advocates of the measure would lead you to believe, but it is cheaper, and why should it not be?

I doubt if a bill were introduced in this body which would exempt insurance companies from taxation would get a half dozen votes. I doubt if a bill were introduced in this House which provided housing facilities, rent free in some great Government building, for the insurance companies of this country would get one vote. I doubt if the Government would provide for the insurance companies free of cost clerical help, stationery, and all that goes with carrying on the business, and so why should not the Government write insurance for less than the old line companies?

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. VESTAL. I want to ask if the gentleman's bill carries compensation for injuries to persons other than those in the Government employ?

Mr. UNDERHILL. There is a law at the present time which takes care of all Government employees, that is controlled and carried on by the Government. Comparisons could be made, if we had the time, to show that where the State fund is in operation, the usual inefficiency, the usual amount of red tape, and the usual lackadaisical performance on the part of the employees of the Government and a greater delay and a greater loss than in the old line companies. You will be told that the old line companies or stock companies try to rob these poor people and there is just as much evidence on the other side that they treat them fairly and decently. Since I have been a Member of Congress I have had occasional criticism of the workman's compensation of Government employees, in the inadequacy of performance, claimed by those who have had dealings with them, of the unfairness and the injustice of their decisions. You can not carry on a great business like this without having these things occur. The insurance companies are fair game for those who claim that the Government should carry on all lines of industry.

But I want to know where we are going to stop. If we are going to nationalize all the insurance companies and take out of productive enterprise some half a million or a million or a million and a half of people—I do not know that it will not take more than that—and place them in a soft job under civil service in Government offices, working them an hour or an hour and a half or two hours a day less than an ordinary man works—and an insurance man, I suppose, works 10, 12, or 14 hours a day, according to his ambition and initiative and what he may find in the way of return for it—if we are going to do all these things, we are going to have the same experience as has been had in many States in operating life-insurance companies.

Insurance is not a governmental function, but I know that in every State where it has been tried it has been shown that people will not come along and take out savings-bank, life insurance, and endowment insurance; it has got to be done by earnest application to work and solicitation on the part of agents. This is a national question. It is of great import and interest to the whole country, and I do not suppose that the Members of this House have been importuned on both sides on any question on any bill that has come before them to any greater extent than they have been on this bill and on this principle.

Now, in the brief time I have remaining I want to emphasize just four points. First, this bill provides for compulsory monopolistic insurance, leaving the employer no option on the selection of an insurance carrier. He must take Government insurance. He can not insure with a stock company, and he can not insure in a mutual company. He can not self-insure. He must take out governmental insurance.

Second. I want this to appeal to every lawyer, and I want to have the attention of every man who is a lawyer in this body; I want him to pay attention to this feature: The insurance commissioner under this bill is not only empowered to determine the rate and the amount and the premium, but he is also charged with the collection of the premium, the determination of the amount, and the payment of compensation, and there is no check whatever upon his decision and action. Third, the insurance commissioner under this bill possesses every authority to review his own decision, with the right of appeal to the court only as a matter of law. Fourth, that the commission created under this bill combines normal administrative functions with the business of insurance and has to a considerable degree the power of judicial review. Such concentration of authority is contrary to the inherent principles of good business and good government.

I call the attention of lawyers particularly to that phase of it, because I know that they can understand that. I find it very difficult, however, to get a lawyer to understand the first principles of business procedure. [Laughter.] It is a pretty hard job to get him to understand that. He says, "This does not affect me. Why should we not have it? It is cheaper." I want to put it up to you lawyers: Suppose the Government went into the law business and provided for each and every litigant a counsel and stated what the fees of that counsel should be and how much time he should give to his business, whether he should be employed in this section or that section; but that no person in this country could hire a lawyer without going to the United States Government and taking the lawyer that the United States Government should assign.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. In the opinion of the gentleman would the employee of the Government get a cheaper insurance rate under this method than he would under a private insurance concern?

Mr. UNDERHILL. If I understand the gentleman correctly, I tried to explain that undoubtedly under the Fitzgerald bill the State insurance, with no tax to pay, no rent to pay, nothing to pay for stationery, stamps, and other expenses, they could insure and would and do insure for less than the old-line companies.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who pays that overhead?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The taxpayer, of course. The Government can carry on any line of business for less than private capital can do it, or private industry can do it, because they always have the taxpayer to pay the deficit.

Now, what is going to be beyond that? Are you going to throw all these people out of employment and have them come before the Civil Service Board, where perhaps some of the best solicitors in the country will be thrown down, because they can not pass the civil-service examination? But you are going to fill up a bureau here in Washington. Understand, I am speaking on the broad phase of this situation, not confined to the workingman's compensation. You say they already have a board here handling this proposition, but on inquiry I find that board has all it can do now, and they say if additional work is placed upon them they would have to go to the Civil Service Commission for additional employees to do the additional work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed himself by the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield to myself five minutes additional.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Even an employer who placed every safeguard around his employees to prevent injury, and there was no risk, practically, and who wanted to carry it himself, would be liable under both bills now being considered and could not even plead ordinary lawful defense of contributory negligence or assumption of risk or the defense of fellow servant.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is very true.

Mr. LAZARO. You started to tell us about the Government in business.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is true. The purpose of workingmen's compensation is to relieve society of the care and rehabilitation of those who are injured in industry. In other words, it is for the purpose of replacing the human machinery at the expense of the industry rather than at the expense of the community at large. That is the purpose, and industry pays the bill.

Now, what I was going to say is that in several States of the Union they have competitive State insurance. There are four States, however, that have an exclusive State insurance. But in those States where they have competitive insurance, where the State has a fund and carries on at a very much lower rate of insurance, anywhere from 70 per cent to 89 per cent of those who require insurance get it of the old line or the mutual companies.

Now, why do they do it? They do it for the same reason that you have your favorite places to trade, because you get service, and you do not have service when the Government carries on any line of business. But in a private business you go where you can get the best service. So these business men who have been successful, realizing that the cheapest is not always the best, go where they can get service, and they go to the old line, the mutual, or the private companies rather than insuring in the State companies. I have no objection whatever to the establishment of a State or national company here in Washington to compete with the old-line companies. I have no idea but the private companies will hold their own in spite of the difference in the cost between the State or Government insurance company and the private company. They argue, and with good justice, that the amount of business is too small, and that it can not be successfully divided. They fear competition.

Now, another thing I want to bring to your attention is that one difference between my bill and the Fitzgerald bill is that the Fitzgerald bill includes domestic employees. There are only four States in the Union that do not have some form of workman's compensation. Every man of you here representing farming communities, if he has studied this question at all, knows that farm employees are excluded from the operations of the State laws. It is a very unjust proposition, but they never could have got by your State legislatures if it had included farmers. In all the States but one it excludes domestic employees.

Now, we will say that Mr. SWING, living out here in an apartment, and alongside of him Mr. MOORE and Mr. BEEDY and a number of Members of this House, forming a little group in that locality, hire a man to put out the ashes once a week. He becomes a regular employee of those various households. In putting out the ashes this morning for one of these people, this man slips on the snow and the ice and breaks a leg. Every one is liable if not covered by insurance and if you have not gone down to the commissioner and told him that you had so many employees. Or you employ a governess or nurse to wheel out the baby three afternoons a week or every afternoon. She is a regular employee. You have to cover her with workmen's compensation. You have a cook in the kitchen who cuts a finger when paring potatoes. That cook must be covered under your workmen's compensation act.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. Take a practical illustration. My cook last week got up on a stove to clean the wall, instead of getting up on the stepladder which I furnished her. She fell and she is laid up. What happens under those circumstances? Do I have to take out insurance?

Mr. HICKS. You have to foot the bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. You have to be insured before that happens, and if you do not she can go into court, and you have no defense.

Mr. HILL. Even if she did not use the stepladder which I provided for her use?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It does not make a particle of difference.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman tell us the results of his observations as to the workings of this law in States where it does cover domestic employees, as in the State of New York? Is it not pretty satisfactory?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It does not cover domestic employees in the State of New York.

Mr. KINDRED. Does the gentleman mean to say that it does not cover any domestic employee in New York?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No, sir; nor farm employees either.

Mr. KINDRED. With all deference to the gentleman's thorough study of this question, I think he will find that it does cover domestic and farm employees, and that it works satisfactorily.

Mr. UNDERHILL. There is only one State in the Union where it does cover domestic employees, and that is the State of New Jersey. I do not know how it works there.

Now, I have tried to cover this proposition from a broad standpoint. We have heard Members on both sides of the House, Democrats and Republicans, talk about the inefficiency of the Government in business; and yet day by day we are growing worse and worse in every way. Somebody comes along with a proposition with more or less sob stuff in it, and tender-hearted Members immediately say, "Yes; here is a good thing, let us do it." And you place the Government still further in business. You behold the failure of Government, not only National but State and municipal in carrying on efficiently and economically the affairs of government and the affairs of business so far as they have gone, and you are irritated and disgusted, and if you are a taxpayer you are almost in despair. Yet you come along with proposition after proposition just because it does not affect you.

Sooner or later, gentlemen, it is going to get you all. If you keep it up it is going to get you all. If you are going to commence with the railroads and mines and the insurance companies, eventually you have got to reach the farmers. Now, the only country we can point to is Russia. There they took all wealth as represented by "predatory" wealth; they took the railroads, and then they went further and further down the line until all that was left was the farmer, and they took even the seed grain away from him.

The result was famine, and then all that was left was the church property, and I notice they are seizing that. Do you want that kind of chaos? You say, "Oh, that is drawing the long bow. There is nothing like that going to happen in this country." Well, 10 years ago you would not have believed anything like that would happen in Russia; but it did happen, and it will happen here, because you have got to have the money to carry on the Government, and the more business you put under the Government the more you take out of taxable property; and the more people you put into Government employment the more you take from the regular producer and the less and less of ambition and initiative you get among the people. So sooner or later as you extend these operations you are going to bring in more and more of these people, and by and by you will find a combination of mine workers, railroad workers, insurance workers, postal employees, of all the Government employees throughout the length and breadth of this country, and they are going to control legislation. A minority of the people, because of their organization, are coming to Congress and tell you what you shall do and what you shall not do.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Under the Fitzgerald bill would not an employer be permitted to obtain liability insurance to cover his liability?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not his liability to his employees. He has got to insure with the State company.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. On page 2 of the bill the definition given says that employment means all private employment. What is the situation of the Government employees?

Mr. UNDERHILL. They are already insured.

Mr. HILL. They are insured by the Government?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. I want to ask if under his bill the word "injury" is broad enough to include diseases arising out of employment.

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; that is one of the great faults of the Fitzgerald bill. You can not determine what diseases result from occupation, but my bill does include occupational diseases.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The only difference between your bill and the Fitzgerald bill is that your bill permits the employer to take out liability insurance?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Practically the only difference between my bill and the Fitzgerald bill is that I do not countenance Government insurance, but do encourage, so far as possible, initiative, ambition, and business along the lines insurance has been conducted. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAMPERT].

Mr. LAMPERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FIRST WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW TO BECOME EFFECTIVE WAS THAT OF WISCONSIN, ENACTED MAY 3, 1911.

Mr. LAMPERT. Mr. Chairman, eleven years ago Wisconsin put in effect a workmen's compensation law. By that law we adopted a new principle. For the first time since the development of industrialism in this country we made a comprehensive attempt to anticipate personal injuries. Instead of waiting until injuries occurred to do something about them, we provided in advance for the succor of those injured and their dependents.

To-day I can assure you that employers and working people in Wisconsin are united in praise of our most beneficent compensation act. Under its provisions it has been found possible to adjust amicably over 16,000 injury claims a year. It is inconceivable that any large proportion of these workingmen would have been able to recover at common law. Even if they did, they would have been subjected to aggravating delays and an expenditure for litigation with which the lawyers present are only too familiar. Under our compensation law the injured employees of Wisconsin are receiving over $2,000,000 annually, in most cases without delay and without deduction for lawyers' fees. By even the remotest stretch of the imagination, can it be supposed that so large a sum ever reached the pockets of the injured in an equal space of time under the old common-law system?

It may be taken as fundamental that the primary need of an injured person is medical care adequate to restore his independence. The amount spent for medical care under any system of dealing with injuries is, therefore, a good measure of its actual accomplishment. It anyone doubts the beneficence of a compensation law, let him reflect that the injured workingmen of our State have been allowed $500,000 a year for medical aid alone.

This first step toward securing justice for the man who toils which Wisconsin took in 1911, has since been followed by 42 States. This very body has acknowledged the righteousness of such measures by enacting in 1916 what is considered the most equitable American compensation law. I refer to the workman's compensation act for employees of the Federal Government. In 1918 we extended its benefits to the public employees of the District of Columbia. By what manner of logic can we justify refusal to extend similar protection to the private employees of the District of Columbia?

Reflect, gentlemen, that here in the District the harshness of the ancient common-law defenses has never been mitigated. Those defenses grew up in the days when master and servant worked side by side, but they persist here to-day. In the District, if a worker is injured through the carelessness of a fellow-servant he can recover nothing. If, toward the end of the day when tired and weary, his vigilance relaxes ever so slightly so that his own carelessness contributes in any degree to the injury, he can not recover, no matter how great the employer's fault. Or, if, when at work in a power house, he is electrocuted, his widow may recover nothing because the possibility of an electric shock is inherent in the work of a power house and any employee who enters such employment is supposed to assume the risk. If a workman's compensation law is needed in any State in this Union, how much more is it needed right here in the District where the common-law defenses make recovery for injury well nigh impossible.

The bill now before you is a proper bill. The fact that in its main provisions it is identical with the Federal employees' compensation law enacted by this very body should recommend it to you.

The only important divergence from precedent set by the Federal employees' act is made necessary by the fact that in the former case the employer is the Federal Government, while this new bill relates to private employers. We are therefore obliged to devise a plan for collecting funds out of which the compensation authorized by the bill may be paid.

The problem we have before us is fundamentally a problem of taxation. We know that within the limited area of the District there will be approximately 5,000 disabling accidents and 40 fatal injuries a year. It remains to assess employers within the District a sufficient amount to provide the compensation allowed under this bill. The bill provides that assessments shall be levied in proportion to industrial hazard.

Each industry has a more or less definitely characteristic hazard. Within each industry there are variations in hazard depending on the extent to which safety devices have been introduced in the particular plant. All such variations in the safeguards surrounding workmen are to be taken into consideration in computing assessments. Nonhazardous industries will be assessed at a lower rate than hazardous industries, and employers who have installed all modern safety devices will be assessed less than employers who have not attempted to safeguard their men. Can we devise a method better calculated to promote industrial safety?

In my State we did not arrange to raise the money this way. Instead we required employers to insure and the insurance companies paid out the compensation. But they charged for the service. Of course they made a profit out of it. They were so expensive that in self-defense the employers of Wisconsin organized mutual insurance companies which have done business at an overhead expense of less than one-half of what is charged by the casualty companies.

The plan in the Fitzgerald bill is like one big mutual. The employers will all contribute to one fund which will pay out the benefits. Since they will not have to pay agents' fees or profits, overhead expenses will be reduced to a nominal sum. If we turned the business over to insurance companies their overhead expenses would increase the cost for employers in the District of Columbia 60 per cent. District employers would not like that.

The workers want this plan. They say that they are not fairly treated by insurance companies. Indeed, who does not know of instances where an insurance adjuster has tried to "settle" a claim for less than the full amount? I am opposed to any compensation law which purports to benefit labor but which places them at the mercy of claim adjusters. Injured workmen and their dependents should not have to fight for their rights.

Gentlemen, Wisconsin has found mutual insurance the best. I favor the Fitzgerald bill because, although we may refer to it in other terms, what it really provides is that employers shall join one big mutual. If we are going to pass a law for the benefit of workingmen, let us be clear about it. Let us legislate for the workers—not for the commercial insurance interests.

The primary purpose of this bill was scarcely referred to in the hearings before the committee having it in charge; most of the arguments for it were based upon the compensation features. No man can be compensated for the loss of an eye or a leg or an arm. No amount of money will compensate for the loss of life. Those are things that can not be bought, neither can they be paid for. The only thing hoped for by the committee, so far as compensation is concerned, is that the burdens of accidents may be spread out over society as a whole, instead of permitting it to rest entirely upon those to whom accidents occur and whose lives depend upon their ability to earn a living wage.

Those who opposed the bill opposed it because it does not hand to them this new business under a law which compels every employer to insure—because it prohibits capitalizing the blood of a fellow human being. They have that right now in the District of Columbia; they had that right in my State and in every other State before compensation laws went into effect, and let us see how they used that right. I am not personally familiar with conditions in other States, but I am somewhat familiar with those in my State both before and after our compensation law went into effect. Casualty companies were doing business in Wisconsin before the compensation law was ever thought of. They had the opportunity to do the very thing our compensation act in Wisconsin did and the very thing this bill contemplates for the District of Columbia. They had the opportunity to spread the burdens of carrying accidents over society as a whole and to compensate, in a measure at least, for accidents. But did they do it? No. Instead of insuring so that an injured employee would get compensation, they insured so that he would get nothing. They not only did not relieve him of his burden but they added to it, and in doing this they did not lessen the burden of the people as a whole, but they added to that also.

I have in mind a case where an employee, working for a lumber company, lost an eye by being hit by a piece of flying timber. His employer was insured against liability for accidents. The casualty company did not insure to enable the injured employee to get damages, but to keep him from getting damages. This employee sued the insurance company for damages. After many delays and postponements he secured a verdict for $7,000. The insurance company appealed to the supreme court, and after still further delays the supreme court referred it back to the lower court for a retrial. After other delays he secured a verdict for $3,500, and the casualty company again appealed to the supreme court. It was again referred back for a new trial and between the time it was referred back and the time when the new trial was to come off this employee settled with the insurance company, 15 years after the accident occurred, for $1,500, and it cost him $1,780 for attorney's fees and other expenses connected with the trial, and it cost the county in which the accident occurred $26,000. That was the public's share of the burden.

Another case is where an employee lost a leg. There was no question of contributory negligence, assumption of risk, or of being injured through fault of a fellow servant. Yet the insurance carrier fought this case back and forth between the circuit and supreme courts for a period of 16 years, at the end of which he secured an award of $4,000. In the meantime the injured man became discouraged, gave up all hope of recovering, took his wife and two children and moved to Oregon, where both he and his wife and two children died before the award was confirmed by the supreme court. His attorney had taken the case on a contingent fee of 75 per cent of the damages secured, agreeing to pay the costs. The $1,000 which would have gone to the injured man had he lived is, or was the last I know of it, laying in a bank in Wisconsin awaiting a claimant.

Another is a case where an injured man secured a verdict three different times, and upon the request of the insurance company a new trial was granted each time. But between the time the third request was granted and the time for the fourth trial the insurance company, together with certain employers which it was insuring, succeeded in defeating the judge who had presided over this case at each of the trials and elected in his place a judge who found for the defendant insurance company. The plaintiff then asked for a new trial and was refused. The defendant had asked for and was granted three new trials. The plaintiff asked for only one and was refused.

Such illustrations as these could, I believe, be extended almost indefinitely, but they are sufficient to show that it is not a question with casualty companies of doing justice, but a question of capitalizing the blood of an unfortunate human being. The insurance companies could have settled every one of these cases I have mentioned for less money than it cost to litigate them. But their purpose in fighting these cases was to serve notice on 10,000,000 other wage earners in the country who might be injured that it would be cheaper for them to go off and nurse their injuries alone, bear the burden themselves, die in the poorhouse, if need be, than to sue an insurance company for damage, and the more they could make a case cost the more effective the notice was.

But, regardless of all this, I believe the compensation feature of legislation of this kind is of secondary importance; compensation is important as a means of tiding injured employees over their periods of distress and as a means of relieving them of a part of the burden of accidents. But the most important thing is to prevent these periods of distress if we can. In other words, the primary purpose of legislation of this kind is to reduce the number of accidents. But here again casualty companies missed a golden opportunity to be of real service to humanity. They were interested only in the thing that would induce employers to take out insurance; accidents would do that thing. So the more accidents the more insurance.

As to whether compensation acts of this kind will reduce accidents, I will again refer to my own State, not because any more may have been accomplished there than in other States but because I am more familiar with what has occurred in Wisconsin than I am with any other State.

Several years ago a bureau of labor was created in Wisconsin to give a man a job who had been defeated for State treasurer. It was conceived in politics and remained in politics until about the year 1901, when a Member of the present Congress from that State was placed at the head of this bureau. Safety laws such as were found in other industrial States at the time were enacted to protect wage earners from injury and a force of factory inspectors were added to the bureau to enforce the safety laws. During the eight years following 1901 prosecutions for violation of these laws increased from a few per year to 860 per year, or an average of about 1 per day. And the strange thing about it was that accidents increased in about the same proportion. In 1910, if I remember correctly, there were 30,000 accidents in Wisconsin that caused a loss of time of two weeks or more, and 271 of these were fatal, and I believe the casualty companies were more responsible for this increase than all other factors put together. The casualty companies would take over the employer's liability for a consideration and the employer would forget about it, not that he was lacking in human sympathies but because his business took most of his attention.

But, as I said, the commissioner of labor discovered that while his campaign for accident prevention became more intense each succeeding year accidents were ever on the increase, until he finally decided if accidents were ever to decrease some different method of prevention must be devised. He found no method in this country different from his own. He studied conditions in other countries, and finally conceived the idea of a compensation act coupled up with accident prevention, and he drew the first compensation act that became a law in this country. Within three years after that act was in force the number of accidents causing a loss of time of two weeks or more had fallen from 30,000 to 7,500 and the number of deaths had decreased from 271 to 95 per year. This I conceive to be the chief object of compensation acts.

I come now to the question of who shall carry the risk. So far as I know, there are four methods of carrying risks—mutual insurance, casualty insurance, self-insurance, and State insurance. Wisconsin has the first three. Its largest mutual company writes more than one-third of the compensation insurance business of the State. When it was organized it was with the expectation that the State would eventually take it over. So far as self-insurance is concerned, I know of no company in the District of Columbia big enough to carry their own insurance. You may think that the street railway companies are big enough to do this, but if you will read their testimony before the District Committee when the question of reducing fares was before that body, you will find they are on the verge of bankruptcy. As casualty companies, if their history before compensation acts went into effect is not convincing proof that they ought not be given any consideration by Congress, then let us look at some of the things they have done since these acts have gone into effect in some of the States. In Wisconsin they started a campaign to make the employers believe they were going to be put out of business by the compensation act, and then they proceeded to charge and collect rates that were almost confiscatory in many instances. They also sent their agents out among the farmers to convince them that they were to be ruined by this legislation, when there was not one farmer in a hundred that came under the act at all. The commission overcame most of this by encouraging and helping build up a mutual company. Ohio went through the same experience, but it solved the problem by kicking the casualty companies out of the State.

As for cost, the latest figures I have for Wisconsin show that only 50 cents out of every dollar collected by casualty companies reach the injured employees. From 82 to 86 cents out of every dollar charged by the mutual company reach the injured workman, while in Ohio, under State insurance, I understand from 97 to 98 cents out of every dollar collected reaches the injured workmen. Of course, these figures from Ohio do not include administrative cost. That is paid by the State, as I understand it. And here I want to introduce a letter I just received from the former secretary of the Wisconsin Industrial Commission:

LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE LIBRARY,
WISCONSIN FREE LIBRARY COMMISSION,
Madison, January 5, 1923.

HON. FLORIAN LAMPERT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LAMPERT: In response to your telegram of January 5, permit us to say that there can be no question that the State funds, and particularly exclusive State funds, have operated at a much smaller expense ratio than the private compensation insurance companies. The Ohio State fund, for instance, has had an expense ratio of only 3 per cent, which is much less than the expense ratio of any private insurance company. In Wisconsin the rates of the private insurance companies are subject to regulation by the compensation insurance board. On the business done in this State in 1921, however, the actual expense cost of all of the stock companies was 41.5 per cent of the earned premiums. Their loss was 50 per cent and their underwriting profits 9.5 per cent. In other words, out of every dollar received from the policyholders the stock companies in this State in 1921 paid to injured workmen 50 cents, used 41.5 cents for their expenses, and had 9.5 cents for profits.

It should be noted, however, that the stock companies in Wisconsin wrote only 47.8 per cent of the entire compensation insurance business in this State. Mutual companies wrote the other 52.2 per cent of the total business. The single local mutual (the Employers' Mutual Liability Insurance Co.) wrote somewhat more than one-third of all of the compensation insurance business in this State. The Wisconsin mutuals in the last year—1921—had expenses amounting to 21.2 per cent of the earned premiums and actual losses amounting to 55.5 per cent. The remaining 23.3 per cent of the earned premiums of the mutuals was paid back to the policyholders in the form of dividends or placed in surplus. All of the mutuals write at rates which are at least 10 per cent below the stock company rates, and nearly all of them in addition pay dividends. The largest mutual, the Employers' Mutual Liability Insurance

Co., writes at rates 10 per cent below the stock company rates. and last year paid a dividend of 26 per cent. In effect, this company thus gave its policyholders insurance at only two-thirds of the cost of insurance in the stock companies.

You will note, however, that even the mutuals have expense ratios which are considerably higher than those of the Ohio State fund. The Employers' Mutual, for instance, had an expense ratio in 1921 of 19 per cent, while all mutuals operating in Wisconsin had an expense ratio of 21.2 per cent. It is claimed by the insurance companies that the very low expense ratio of the Ohio State fund is due to the fact that a portion of the expenses of the fund are borne by the State. Other State funds, however, also show lower expense ratios than any private insurance company which operates in Wisconsin.

In regard to other arguments for a State-fund system of compensation insurance, we call attention to the fact that the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor at its convention in July of this year adopted a resolution asking for the establishment of a monopolistic State fund in Wisconsin. A bill to this effect will be introduced in our legislature next week. Beyond question the private insurance compensation companies are subject to the strictest possible regulation in Wisconsin. Nevertheless the workingmen in this State are now officially on record in demanding that all private companies be barred from this field.

Hoping that this letter will reach you in time, and with personal regards, I am,

Very truly yours, E. E. WITTE.
Chief, Legislative Reference Library.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] has 5 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has 17 minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, when the bill was up for consideration on a previous occasion I occupied considerable time, more time than I supposed I was occupying. I am going to yield one minute to the gentleman from New York, and then yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I want to say with reference to the compensation law in New York State that, contrary to the impression of my well-informed and personal friend [Mr. UNDERHILL], it does cover domestic employees, and with respect to that class and all other classes the law has worked splendidly. I am employing about 300 employees, and recently paid the claim of a domestic employee whose arm was permanently injured. I have as an employer rested more comfortably and done business with more satisfaction since the law has been in operation than I did before. We have found that the law works splendidly in every respect, both in regard to employers and employees.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. When was the law changed in New York?

Mr. KINDRED. I do not know; but I know I paid within three months the claim of a domestic employee, this domestic employee coming within the New York law, which provides that domestic employees employed in institutions, public and private, shall be covered.

Mr. MACGREGOR. This is my first knowledge of it.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it seems that the Members of the House who have given this matter attention are agreed that the District of Columbia should not remain one of the benighted parts of this Republic that has no compensation bill at all. There are now only six States remaining that have no compensation law—Arkansas, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Missouri, and Florida. What sort of a compensation act should we have? I started in prejudiced more strongly than the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL]. I did not see why there should not be competition with the insurance companies and it is only most unwillingly that I have been brought to the conclusion that the principle laid down in this bill is the only principle on which an adequate and just compensation bill can be enacted and satisfactorily administered, especially in the District of Columbia where the territory and number of people are limited.

FOREIGN INTERESTS' PROPAGANDA.

I have been confirmed in my conviction by several of those who, for the benefit of the insurance companies, have united in opposition to this bill. I do not include in that Members of the House who are actuated by the ideas which were formerly my own. The organization that has produced the propaganda against this bill is the Workmen's Compensation Publicity Bureau, of 8 Maiden Lane, New York City, and is controlled by foreign insurance companies, not the domestic insurance companies alone. At least two of the three members of the executive committee, C. H. Neely, chairman, and Samuel Appleton, are managers of foreign insurance companies, the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Co. and Employers Liability Co., both of London, England, and both drawing great profits out of the misery and misfortune of our American working people.

My distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] says that insurance companies have as much right to do business as lawyers and doctors. I say to you, my friends, that he is absolutely right. But here are we going to create an opportunity for profit, yet create no opportunity to give any service? I say to you that no doctor and no lawyer has a vested right to practice his profession upon the people of this or any other country when in return he can give no service.

The substitute suggested by my friend from Massachusetts means that we must subsidize the insurance companies of this country to the extent of 30 or 40 per cent of the premiums which they will charge, and they can not do business for less and they say so. It is an insurance organization that is putting out a reply to the House committee's report—and I would like to have the Members read the report on this bill, because it is exhaustive and has gathered together all the statistics and the experience of the different States with the various forms of workmen's compensation. The answer to the report of this House committee, filed by the Workmen's Compensation Publicity Bureau, controlled by foreign insurance companies, is this:

Finally, it is argued—referring to the committee's report—in the report that the comparatively small area and limited number of employees in the District of Columbia make a monopolistic—exclusive—State insurance fund there especially advisable. Those facts do preclude a competitive State fund. But the more advisable alternative is no State fund at all.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How does the bill the gentleman is proposing differ from the workmen's compensation act that we have now in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It follows it almost line for line.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If that be true, then what is the necessity for this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because this bill operates for the benefit of those in private employment. The first bill passed for the District was for Federal employees all over the United States. It covered all Federal employees. Then that law was enlarged a few years ago to include the employes of the government of the District of Columbia. This extends the benefits of the law to the employees of private corporations, machine shops, railroads, and so forth.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If that be true, if it reaches outside of Government employees, then what business has the Congress of the United States meddling with that in that way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because there is no one else to legislate for the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. But they have every advantage of all sorts from the accident insurance company.

CAPITAL AGAINST LABOR.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They may carry that. One of the ideas of this bill is that we destroy the ugly friction and bad feeling between the employer and the employee when a man is injured, under the workmen's compensation law. He does not then raise up an enemy in his employer, who is anxious to avoid a lawsuit, and the employer does not have to depend upon an insurance company to fight his employee for him in court.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the District of Columbia is to establish an insurance fund for civilian employees, why should not every State in the Union employ a similar fund for the same purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Most of them do, and in many cases it is an exclusive fund, and no insurance company is permitted to write the insurance.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean to say that all of the States have gone to that position of paternalism?

FORTY-THREE STATES HAVE LAW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. All but six of them have some form of workmen's insurance. In 17 of the States there is the State fund, and in 8 of them it is an exclusive fund; that is, no insurance company is permitted to write it, and where that is so, there are special reasons for it. I have only a minute or two and I would appreciate very much if the gentleman would permit me to finish.

STEAL $5,700,000 FROM INJURED.

I want now to call attention to and be permitted to insert in the RECORD a letter from the compensation commissioner, of the head of the department of the State of Pennsylvania, who was called upon by a Member of this House to analyze and criticize this bill in view of the fact that in Pennsylvania there is a competitive State fund.

He promptly joins both sides in saying that there can not be in the District of Columbia a competitive system, because the expense will be exorbitant, and adds that, owing to the advantages of the State fund, which is 30 per cent more economical than any other form of insurance which can be carried, it is the only form of insurance which ought to be considered for the District of Columbia. The profits of the insurance companies have been enormous. The Lockwood investigation committee of New York, which has recently concluded its work, has found that in some instances their profits are from 2,000 per cent to 6,000 per cent in the State of New York. They have cheated the workmen in the State of New York on their settlements to the extent of over $5,700,000 since the law has been in operation.

It is generally conceded that we ought to have in the District of Columbia a workmen's compensation law. We should have that which is best for the workmen and most economical for the employer. Should we be held up by the insurance companies who say that we are taking away business? We are simply creating what might be an opportunity for insurance companies to place a toll or tax upon the suffering of workmen in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

WOULD ELIMINATE DOMESTICS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have only a minute or two. So far as domestic servants are concerned, I will say that this bill is all-embracing. It is logical and fair. All these things may be stricken out or amended. We may throw out the domestic servants.

Every State has made a compromise. In Maine one of the hazardous occupations is lumbering—working on the rivers—and those interests were strong enough to except this most hazardous occupation from the operation of the workmen's insurance act. In Tennessee one of the most hazardous occupations is mining. The mining interests were strong enough to except mining from the operation of the insurance act. In Ohio, my own State, the agricultural interests do not want to be annoyed by this any more than the Members of Congress want to be annoyed by domestic insurance in their own families, and so the farmers are excepted; and the way that domestic servants are excepted in Ohio is by a provision that one must have at least five employees before he becomes liable to contribution under the act.

BIG ADVANTAGE OF EXCLUSIVE FUND.

In this bill we simply take advantage of the machinery which we already have, the machinery which the Government has already established for its own employees, and ask the employers of the District of Columbia to pay the bare cost of carrying this protection for the workingmen through this commission which will administer the fund as a general mutual for the benefit of all these people, without permitting the insurance companies to come in and impose a profit out of a business that did not exist before, for which they render no substantial service and in which there is no vested right.

If we turn the employers over to the insurance companies we would simply hand over about 35 per cent of all of the premiums to be used in creating competition among the insurance companies, the expense of acquiring insurance in competition among themselves, maintaining their offices, their agents, paying taxes, and also these enormous profits. Should we do that? Is there any reason why we should compel the employers to carry this protection and then not afford them the way, which is so easily opened, by permitting them to contribute to a general fund the bare expense; providing a sort of general mutual company supervised by the present Federal commission, the Federal Employees Commission, which already exists for some half million employees of the Government and some 6,000 public employees of the District of Columbia? The overhead expense in my own State of this exclusive fund is less than 3 per cent, and in some places the insurance companies have caused the expense to rise to 50 per cent of the premium, taken out before there is a cent for the injured employee.

THE INSURANCE COMPANIES' GRAFT.

Let me call attention to the last report of the insurance companies to the State of New Jersey, where the Aetna Life Insurance Co. collected in a year $515,000 of premiums and all the losses it paid that year was $163,900. It collected a huge profit out of this opportunity and at the expense of injured, defenseless workmen.

Now, about domestic servants. This House may easily amend that feature and cut them out. If you want to change it, you may cut out the farmers. It is easily amended.

The principle on which the bill rests is the only one which can give adequate protection to the employees of the District of Columbia and avoid an unnecessary and wasteful burden upon the employer. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In extending my remarks, and especially at this time, I want to call particular attention to the report of the Lockwood investigating committee to the New York Legislature after eight years' experience in that State with costly competition of commercial insurance companies:

NEW YORK EXPERIENCE.

In its final report just presented to the New York Legislature the official Lockwood investigating committee recommends that all accident compensation insurance be handled in one public fund, as provided in the Fitzgerald bill for the District of Columbia.

"It is estimated that upward of $40,000,000 was paid for workmen's compensation insurance in the State of New York in the year 1920, of which about $30,000,000 went to the stock companies," it is stated. "The total losses paid by reason of industrial accidents were millions less. Were the premiums adjusted to the actual loss there would be a saving of upward of $10,000,000."

The report states that when the legislature made compulsory the compensatory insurance of workmen it should have provided the means of insurance on the lowest possible terms consistent with the welfare of the workmen so as to make the burden upon industry as light as justice would permit. It was pointed out that the private companies fought the State fund so that the former were permitted to continue in the field in competition with the State fund.

"There is no mystery about methods that have been employed against the State fund and the mutual companies," the committee states. "The facts thus established are taken from the records of the companies themselves; the letters they have written, the propaganda that is being openly distributed by their vast publicity bureaus.

"When at the time of the organization of the State fund the private companies were allowed to remain in the field, it surely was not contemplated that they would be permitted to combine to destroy the State fund."

The official committee brings out that where all the employers are required to insure their risk in one mutual or State fund, as provided in the Fitzgerald bill for the District of Columbia, the administrative cost is less than 3 per cent of the premiums, whereas in New York the cost in private companies ranges from 35 per cent to 40 per cent.

The official commission concludes that the exclusive plan of compensation insurance will afford the following advantages: It would promote more prompt payment of losses. It would obviate expenditures of great sums of money for commissions now paid by the private companies. It would promote cooperation between employers and employees to reduce accidents and to better conditions in industry. Under an exclusive State fund litigation would almost disappear from the courts in connection with industrial accidents and claims for compensation. Under an exclusive public system the law could more easily be liberalized in favor of the workmen.

HEAVY COST OF PRIVATE INSURANCE IN NEW JERSEY.

I now want to call the attention of the Congress to an extract from the recent report of insurance companies writing workmen's compensation made to the State of New Jersey, which will indicate the large amount collected as premiums and the comparatively small amounts which reach the beneficiaries:

WHY INSURANCE COMPANIES FIGHT WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

The department of banking and insurance of New Jersey reports premiums collected and losses paid by workmen's compensation insurance companies in New Jersey for year ended December 31, 1920, as follows:

	Premiums on risks written.	Losses paid.	Premiums collected over losses.
Aetna Life	$515,333.71	$163,902.02	$351,431.69
American Mutual Liability	441,214.46	180,345.16	260,859.30
Commercial Casualty	320,191.77	108,288.59	211,903.18
Employers Liability	321,979.74	165,235.59	156,746.15

Zurich General	109,900.20	44,316.11	65,584.09

The companies quoted above are only those that have collected $100,000 or over in premiums.

The total amount of premiums collected and losses paid of the 45 companies writing workmen's compensation insurance in New Jersey for the year ending December 31, 1920, is as follows:

Premiums collected on risks written	$7,157,248.27
Losses paid	3,001,407.18
Premiums collected in excess of losses paid	4,155,841.09

INSIDIOUS INFLUENCE OF INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The attempt of insurance agents and companies to intimidate the Members of this body is tellingly told by Irene S. Chubb in the following paragraphs:

Congress sometimes appears dilatory merely on account of its unwieldy machinery. Advocates of national legislation are accustomed to watching worthy measures hang fire, often with complacent assurance that they will be passed ultimately. But the Fitzgerald accident compensation bill for private employees in the District of Columbia, although introduced as long ago as April 18, 1921, was still pending when Congress adjourned on September 22, 1922. The time is now ripe for the public to know the real forces which are delaying action in this case.

Why should anyone oppose the Fitzgerald bill? Workmen's accident compensation is an accepted principle in America. Forty-three States have more or less comprehensive laws on the subject. Congress itself has recognized the justice of accident compensation by providing it for Federal employees and also for the public employees of the District of Columbia. It is shocking that in our National Capital, right under the nose of Congress, there is still neither an accident reporting nor an accident compensation law for the District's private employees.

Labor wants a compensation law. Employers want one. Why, then, the delay?

The only serious opposition to the Fitzgerald bill is instigated and promoted by a group selfishly and financially interested in its defeat—the casualty insurance interests. That casualty insurance agents should wish to have only such laws enacted as will permit them to write this branch of insurance without competition is, of course, understandable. Since uniform rate schedules are agreed upon, subject to State approval, there is little or no rate competition between companies. But as a result of legislative and administrative experience the melon patches are being more securely fenced against their exploitation. In protest against the high overhead cost of commercial insurance—averaging 37½ per cent of premiums—certain States, 10 in number, have established State workmen's compensation insurance funds to compete with the private carriers. Seven other States hold that the notorious practices of commercial adjusters in beating down claims of injured employees have altogether disqualified casualty companies from holding such a public trust as meting out compensation to helpless workmen and their dependents. They have accordingly made State-managed mutuals the exclusive method of insuring the workmen's compensation risk. And the United States Supreme Court has approved this method as an "occupation tax" levied against industry to provide payments to those disabled in employment. (Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington, 243 U. S., 243.)

But, naturally, the insurance agents are not to be deprived of good pickings without a contest. In each of the 17 jurisdictions where State funds have now been established casualty insurance interests have relentlessly fought them by methods subtle and insidious.

Counsel for the Lockwood committee in New York, amazed at the rebate discriminations practiced by casualty companies against the State fund, expressed the fear that it could not "coexist with the private companies that are bent upon its destruction and are using all sorts of illegitimate ways of exterminating it as an object lesson to prevent further progress in that direction in other States." In Ohio also, where casualty companies were barred entirely from the field by referendum vote of the people, they are constantly trying to reenter. The respectable sounding "Workmen's Compensation League" and the so-called "Ohio Board of Commerce," both reported to be managed by the same insurance lobbyist, have been used to blind the public to the real source of attacks upon the State fund. In other States unwarranted attempts by representatives of casualty companies to discredit the solvency of the State funds have temporarily served as scarecrows.

Such methods of attack suggest that the assailant is not confident of his ability to meet the issue openly. Certainly the casualty agents have not satisfactorily answered the following facts favoring State funds for workmen's compensation insurance which are brought to light by every official investigation. (Especially significant is the report of the Federal Government survey recently published as Bulletin No. 301 of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics.)

1. The average expense ratio of insurance companies is 37½ per cent, of which only 2 per cent on the average goes for inspection service, while exclusive State funds have kept their average expenses down to only 4 per cent of premiums.

2. Contrary to frequent assertions of insurance agents, the record of insurance companies as to promptness in paying claims is not superior to that of State funds.

3. Underpayments to injured workmen on the part of commercial companies amount to millions of dollars.

4. No injured workman has lost compensation because of failure of a State fund, while the failure of several casualty companies has resulted in losses to claimants amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

With such facts in mind, the Fitzgerald bill was modeled upon the best compensation practice in America. It aims to benefit the injured workingman, not primarily the insurance companies. When the House committee announced hearings on the Fitzgerald bill, public-spirited persons representative of widely diversified groups responded to its support.

WAGE EARNERS INDORSE EXCLUSIVE FUND.

Among those indorsing the bill were the wage earners, unanimously, several experienced public officials, the Association for Labor Legislation, the Women's Trade-Union League, local charity officials, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and the Housekeepers' Alliance of the District of Columbia, which declared the bill to be "liberal to the injured employee and dependents, fair to the employer, and just to the community." In national convention assembled the workers of the country also officially resolved:

"That the American Federation of Labor reaffirms its conviction, based on years of practical experience, that exclusive-fund insurance and the elimination of private profit in workmen's accident compensation is advantageous to wageworkers, and urges the early enactment of the Jones-Fitzgerald bill without change from the exclusive-fund plan."

In contrast to reasoned and calm support, only nervousness can account for the language of a prominent insurance journal which said of the Fitzgerald bill:

"It is high time that the insurance men of America rise up in their might and crush every bit of inimical legislation of this character. A very good start which the insurance agents can and should make will be to strike at this Fitzgerald bill. The measure, if passed, will hurt every insurance agent in the Nation. Whether he thinks so or not, it will take dollars out of his pocket." (United States Review, April 1, 1922.)

At the hearings in Washington, insurance interests were represented by their most highly paid lobbyists. Their opposition appeared in various guises. Their leading speaker was the manager of the Workmen's Compensation Publicity Bureau, an organization supported by a number of large casualty insurance companies. Several other speakers who appeared, avowedly to represent civic welfare organizations, were later found to be in the employ of commercial insurance interests. This monogenetic opposition was nevertheless sufficient to retard action by the House committee during eight months, until January, 1922.

Meanwhile Congressman UNDERHILL—widely known for his vicious attacks on organized labor and for his public charge that his colleagues in Congress think Easter Sunday is a sister of Billy Sunday and Yom Kippur is some sort of a herring—introduced a bill desired by the casualty insurance interests. He used every possible subterfuge to defeat, and that failing, to delay, the Fitzgerald bill. He tried to postpone committee meetings because of his own absence. He made much of alleged minor flaws in the Fitzgerald bill, and attempted to load it with pernicious amendments. His persistence delayed action until February 8, when, despite his tactics, by a record vote the House committee reported the Fitzgerald bill favorably. (Report reprinted, American Labor Legislation Review, March, 1922.)

While UNDERHILL was skirmishing, the insurance agents lay low. But immediately after the bill was reported the Workmen's Compensation Publicity Bureau, before mentioned as the commercial lobbying organization of the casualty interests, circularized Congress with a slyly worded and misleading attack upon the Fitzgerald bill.

The bill having been reported favorably, supporters of the measure were justified in expecting it to be made the order of business on one of the alternate Mondays especially set aside for consideration of legislation affecting the District. But Mondays came and went. It was variously argued that no District legislation was urgent or that the committee chairman was away and that it would be discourteous to consider the Fitzgerald bill in his absence. It was only after three and a half months had gone by that the House committee came together in the absence of the chairman and in exasperation instructed him to make the Fitzgerald bill the order of business in the House of Representatives on the following Monday.

Immediately insurance men redoubled their hostility. Telegrams poured in from insurance agents in the Congressmen's local districts urging them to vote against the Fitzgerald bill. It was hardly surprising then, when on the appointed Monday, June 12, debate was begun, that some Congressmen were inclined to filibuster. It was also noted as an extraordinary circumstance that, despite an understanding that Congressman FITZGERALD should take charge of his own bill on the House floor, the distribution of affirmative time was nevertheless placed in the hands of a Congressman opposed to this measure! This opponent forthwith used half an hour of the affirmative time speaking on extraneous subjects and 15 minutes more speaking against the bill. Filibustering continued and the debate could not be finished.

The debate should have been continued on the next District day. But meanwhile representatives of commercial insurance interests continued to flood Congressmen with stereotyped letters of opposition with dictatorial directions so complete that one Congressman facetiously complained that he had not been told "what to be thinking between the different motions"! And the "Workmen's Compensation Publicity Bureau" circularized Congress with still another expensive and misleading pamphlet. On the next District day and all subsequent District days the Fitzgerald bill was passed over in favor of other measures. It still remains "unfinished business" on the House Calendar for the coming session.

INSURANCE INTERESTS BLOCK LEGISLATION.

Congressman WALTERS, of Pennsylvania, a member of the District Committee, who is in a position to observe from the inside, emphatically characterized this legislative delay as no ordinary case of congressional procrastination. As the long session was about to adjourn, he publicly charged:

"The Insurance Trust has completely blocked legislation giving compensation to District workers. The trust will permit no legislation unless its casualty and guaranty company members dictate such legislation. For the home district of every committee member a violent stream of protest came in, signed by local insurance agents. Threats of reprisal were made if the member did not listen to the demand of his constituents who were in the casualty insurance business. Congressman FITZGERALD received threatening letters from agents of the insurance companies. Congressman ZIHLMAN is a member of an insurance firm, doing business in Cumberland. His partners were approached and told to get Mr. ZIHLMAN 'right.' Congressman ZIHLMAN refused to mix business with public service. His firm received notice from several companies that their business relations were severed."—(Washington Times, September 2, 1922.)

Typical as this is of the outrageous bullying of public servants by casualty insurance interests, aroused citizens everywhere will insist that such tactics must not be permitted to determine the ultimate outcome of this legislation for injured wage earners in the District of Columbia.

The Fitzgerald bill has been before Congress since April, 1921. The measure was carefully drafted along lines tested and found successful in the United States. After full public hearings it met the approval of the House committee and was reported favorably. The wage earners, for whose protection such legislation is primarily designed, insist that it be enacted in this form. It is approved by disinterested students of the subject. There has been no important opposition except that instigated by the casualty insurance interests. Debate upon the bill was begun in the House but remains unfinished.

In its appeal for votes in 1920 the party now in power declared:

"The supreme duty of the Nation is the conservation of human resources through an enlightened measure of social and industrial justice. Although the Federal jurisdiction over social problems is limited, they affect the welfare and interest of the Nation as a whole. We pledge the Republican Party to the solution of these problems through National and State legislation in accordance with the best progressive thought of the country."

The Federal jurisdiction in the District of Columbia is, of course, unlimited. Yet for a year and a half Congress, with the remedy in hand, has withheld—from the victims of occupational injuries at its very doors—the obvious measure of social justice.

Is it likely that the Republican Party which controls this Congress will permanently forget, at the dictation of one selfish group, its earlier promise to favor legislation "to secure the safety, conservation, and protection of labor from the dangers incident to industry"?

ECONOMY OF STATE FUND PLAN.

I have already referred to statements by Hon. Miles M. Dawson, consulting actuary for New York, and I introduce herewith his report, demonstrating that State accident insurance funds have been a success in America. His article is as follows:

During 1919 I was engaged in official investigations of the State insurance funds for workmen's compensation in the three States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York. (Mr. Dawson's investigation of the State fund of New York was made as counsel and actuary for Hon. J. F. Connor, special commissioner appointed by the governor. His investigation of the State workmen's insurance fund of Pennsylvania was made by engagement with the State insurance board which supervises the fund. An earlier examination of the Pennsylvania fund was made a year ago by Mr. Dawson under appointment by the auditor general. His investigation of the Ohio State insurance fund was supplementary to that made by E. H. Downey, special deputy insurance commissioner of Pennsylvania in charge of workmen's compensation insurance.) In Ohio the fund is exclusive, while in Pennsylvania and New York commercial insurance companies are permitted to compete against the State funds. The results of these investigations, therefore, provide an excellent basis for comparison of the records being made by the two types of public workmen's insurance—exclusive State funds and competitive State funds—with private profit-taking stock companies. The findings in all cases present conclusive evidence of the superiority of State funds, particularly the exclusive fund, over commercial insurance from the viewpoint of the best interests of both the employer and the injured employee.

All three funds thus examined were found to be in sound and prosperous condition. Tested by correct and even stringent actuarial standards, they possess ample surplus over all liabilities, immediate and contingent. Compared with stock insurance companies, they result in savings of millions of dollars every year to employers, while at the same time providing most certain and liberal benefits to injured workers and their families. In low expense of management they set new records not merely for themselves but for all carriers of workmen's compensation insurance throughout the world.

It will be remembered that when the earliest workmen's compensation bills were before American legislatures, European experience was cited in support of proposals for public instead of commercial administration of workmen's insurance. Norway then had the best showing, with an exclusive State fund which kept expenses of management down at the remarkably low level of only about 10 per cent of the premiums collected. In Sweden, where the State fund has to compete with stock and mutual companies, the ratio of expenses to premiums was only about 17 per cent. Misguided, as well as interested, opponents of public workmen's compensation raised a chorus that no such favorable results could possibly be realized under our own political institutions. My answer to that was always that America could do much better.

Meantime, within the last decade workmen's compensation laws have been adopted by 42 States, by Porto Rico, by the two Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and by the Federal Government with a model act for its million civilian employees, leaving only six nonindustrial States in the South still without this enlightened form of social insurance protection for workers against industrial accidents. And up to the present time no less than 16 States (also four Provinces of Canada, with a fifth—Manitoba—just now coming into line in this regard) have established State funds to provide compensation insurance at cost. What do the facts of actual experience in the United States now prove?

HEAVY EXPENSE RATIO OF PRIVATE COMPANIES.

Keep in mind the "acid test" fact that in the private profit-taking, stock-insurance companies, doing a nonmutual business in this field, the ratio of management expenses to premiums constitutes a heavy burden on industry, running up as high as 35 to 40 per cent. Compared with that, Norway's 10 per cent and Sweden's 17 per cent appear economical indeed. But State funds in America are vastly better—even better than the most sanguine of us so confidently predicted 10 years ago. In Washington, where the first State fund in this country was established, the proportion of premium receipts taken for management expenses dropped lower and lower until it beat Norway's record by more than half. The Oregon State fund, established considerably later, already has this proportion of expense down to 7½ per cent. My official investigation of the three State funds with which we are here specially concerned disclosed a still greater measure of success in Ohio and very low ratios even when the State fund is in competition with insurance companies.

How great the economies of the State funds were found to be, as contrasted with the wastefulness of commercial companies (whose commissions to agents alone amount to 17½ per cent of the premiums collected), may be seen at a glance from the following:

Ratio of management expense to premiums.[1]

	Per cent.
Commercial stock insurance companies	35–40
Pennsylvania State fund (competitive)	9
New York State fund (competitive)	6.2
Ohio State fund (exclusive)	1.625

The marvelous record in Ohio, where the expense rate in the State fund is only about one-twentieth of the expense rate in stock-insurance companies, thus gives first place in economy of management to the exclusive State fund.

As to the net cost of insurance to policyholders, I found that the exclusive fund in Ohio is doing the best for industry in average savings to insured employers as well as in low expense of management. The New York State fund saves policyholders 29 per cent of the premiums they would have to pay commercial insurance companies; the saving in the Pennsylvania fund is 19 per cent (in one year 14½ per cent) for coal mines and 23½ per cent for other employers; the Ohio fund, where administrative expenses are paid out of the State treasury instead of being taken from premium receipts, makes the very large saving to industry of at least 35 per cent. These figures represent total savings to industry of many millions of dollars every year.

[1] The premiums are here taken at stock insurance company rates; the actual rates of the State funds were very materially lower.

But the aggregate savings have been materially larger; additional savings achieved by the State funds are found in the ample surplus carried. These will make possible still lower costs, together with larger benefits, in future. Indeed, any of these funds could, from its surplus, return to its policyholders an extra dividend of 5 per cent on all the premiums received (computed at the usual casualty insurance company rates). Or, if kept in the surplus as a "stabilizer," these sums work quite as much to the policyholders' advantage as if paid out to them as dividends; they are a true saving.

The remarkably creditable showing on 1918 business in all three State funds is further indicated by comparing their combined losses and expenses with those of the stock companies. Based on the usual casualty insurance company premiums, the losses and expenses together in the New York State fund were only 47 per cent as against 87 per cent in the commercial stock companies; in the Pennsylvania fund 55.4 per cent for coal mines and 50.1 per cent for other industries; in the Ohio fund 65 per cent. It should be explained here that the Ohio cost figures are estimates. Since no stock companies are permitted to carry this business in Ohio, their rates for purposes of comparison in that State are taken, by the actuarial formula regularly used in such computation, to be in the ratio to net claims cost as 100 is to 65. But even with the most conservative figuring the advantages of the State fund, in the matter of bare costs, are strikingly apparent.

In financial strength all three State funds are above criticism. New York's competitive fund was found to have on June 30, 1919, assets of $6,179,376.88, which cover all liabilities, present and future, and leave surplus funds of $1,170,479.94. The Pennsylvania fund, also competitive, had on December 31, 1918, assets of $3,605,729.85, covering all liabilities and leaving a total surplus of $1,961,207.78. The exclusive State fund in Ohio, which has met all compensation claims in full, had on March 1, 1919, accumulated assets of $19,529,022 with all liabilities covered and in addition a surplus of $3,722,471.

The reserves of all three funds were found to be unquestionably adequate, with the soundest actuarial principles strictly adhered to, and with ample provisions for all possible contingencies, including catastrophes. The assets of each fund are safely and profitably invested in high-class public securities. All uninvested funds are intact. So the financial condition of these public insurance funds may most conservatively be said to be at least as strong and unassailable as that of any class of insurance companies.

While the results of these investigations reveal great advantages of the State fund plan, still I discovered in the conduct of each fund an opportunity for constructive suggestions. These relate not at all to the integrity and benefits of the State funds, nor even to the economy of their management, but entirely to the greatest possible dispatch and efficiency in making full and just payments to injured workers who are entitled to them.

It is not that the State funds have done worse in this respect than the stock insurance companies, because they really have done better. It is that any bad features of administration should be weeded out, if discovered, and every effort made to attain the maximum of excellence.

Great economies in expense of management were expected from the State funds; in actual practice, as we have seen, they have been extraordinary. But there is the danger that economy may be carried to such unnecessary extremes that delay in making awards may result, as in Ohio to some extent; or, as in New York, important features of administration—such as statistical, accounting, pay-roll auditing, or detecting and rooting out, if not preventing, evils of "holding up" claimants—may suffer because salaries have been kept too low. Traces, too, were found of bureaucratic flaws on the part of some officials. Such evidences of slackness, however, were not accompanied by any proof that in consequence the results were poorer with respect to net cost to employers or net returns to injured workmen and their families; instead the records of the State funds along these lines were consistently better than those of the commercial insurance companies.

A word of caution and explanation as to "direct settlements" appears necessary in this connection.

PRIVATE COMPANIES MISTREAT WORKMEN.

Our investigation of the New York State fund disclosed the evil of frequent and large underpayments as the result of an amendment to the workmen's compensation law which was in effect about two years, permitting settlements to be made by the insurance carriers directly with the injured claimants. The chief offenders in such "paring down" of claims below just compensation under the law were the commercial insurance companies. The deputy commissioner in charge of workmen's compensation testified that such underpayments on the part of insurance companies and self-insurers has deprived injured employees and their dependents of about $5,700,000.

An attempt is being made on behalf of the commercial insurance interests to divert public attention away from this revelation of their own gross mistreatment of injured workmen by criticism of serious, but in comparison insignificant, abuses discovered within the State fund, to wit: Certain employees of the State "held up" a small number of greedy claimants who were so eager to get "lump sums" that in order to secure such an award they paid as high as half their compensation. The total amount thus given up by claimants against the State fund was about $50,000—a grievous thing, not to be minimized or excused, but also not to be exaggerated. Upon the evidence of this as I brought it out in the public hearings, several persons were indicted.

These offenses, as far as the State fund is concerned, happened only in connection with so-called final adjustments—that is, commutations for lump sums, a practice reluctantly consented to by the State fund after long resistance. It was demanded by employers and employees and had continually been resorted to by self-insurers and by insurance companies, with which the State fund had to compete, so they could get off cheaper. There were also "divvies" by injured employees with "runners" who claimed to be able to secure "lump sums" from insurance companies. Indeed, the most careful investigation showed that what minor abuses did occur in the State fund were directly traceable to commercial insurance company practices and competition.

The wonder is not that some evils existed, but that they should be so few when the State fund is still subjected to the serious disadvantage of unscientific and unscrupulous competition by the stock insurance companies. Yet, during the investigation and since, extensive and even sensational publicity was given to the $50,000 lost to claimants by these practices under the State fund, while very little was said in the "news" about the more than $5,000,000 extracted by the insurance companies.

At any rate the "direct settlement" amendment in New York is now happily repealed.

Altogether, the State funds for workmen's compensation insurance are shown by my investigation to be extraordinarily successful. They are financially sound; they are operated on the strictest actuarial principles; they reduce management expenses to a minimum. They have made steady progress, even under competitive conditions, for in Pennsylvania the premium receipts of the fund have increased from $804,234 in 1916 to $2,456,062 in 1918, and in New York from $689,764 in the last six months of 1914 to $1,867,841 in the last six months of 1918. They permit increasingly liberal benefits for injured workers and their families. They result in enormous savings to industry. In New York, for instance, employers who are insured in the State fund have been saved about $4,000,000 in four and a half years over and above what it would have cost had the same insurance been carried in stock insurance companies; and if all employers in the State insured by stock companies had placed their insurance with the State fund, they would have saved during the same period the very large sum of $18,000,000, which, of course, would have represented an even larger saving to the consuming public. In Ohio the exclusive State fund has saved insured employers at least $15,000,000.

Why, then, should any employer still resist adoption of insurance exclusively in State funds? Perhaps, to some extent, because of "many men, many minds." Partly, also, because of the specious but active propaganda of an interested opposition that the public control of this essentially public function is an "opening wedge" to State monopolization of businesses that are private. There may even be some distrust as to the efficiency of governmental agencies in conducting such an enterprise; which, however, in the case of the State funds has been found wholly without justification. But what holding back still remains on the part of employers might be ascribed largely to the fixed antagonism of some manufacturers' associations to legislative measures for the improvement of industrial conditions—a blind opposition apparent to-day no less than 10 years ago when it was unsuccessfully directed against the enactment of workmen's compensation laws. And then there is close relationship, business and otherwise, between many employers and the stock insurance companies.

It is to be desired, however, that in certain phases of management of State funds, especially in claim adjustments and accident prevention, there should be greater participation of representatives of insured employers and insured workmen.

Most important of all, these investigations show the superiority of State funds over commercial insurance companies and of the exclusive State fund, as in Ohio, over all other carriers. That is the finding of most immediate and direct interest to employers, employees, and the public. The failure of one New York stock insurance company, causing great and, to a considerable extent, irremediable distress, has emphasized anew the interest of industry as well as the public interest in the public administration of this public business of collecting and disbursing sums required for protecting the working population against suffering and destitution due to industrial accidents. The assurance that such protection for the helpless will be surely and promptly forthcoming should not be intrusted to private profit-taking corporations.

OHIO EXPERIENCE WITH STATE FUNDS.

Dealing more specifically with the instructive experience of the exclusive fund law in Ohio, Prof. M. D. Hammond, a leading American economist now at the University of Ohio, has written as follows:

Ever since the Ohio General Assembly in 1911 enacted the first workmen's compensation law in this State and provided that employers might insure themselves against losses from accidents to their employees by paying premiums into a State fund both the principle and the administration of a State insurance fund have been under a steady attack from the private companies writing liability or compensation insurance. So far as workmen's compensation in Ohio is concerned this unfriendly but searching criticism has probably been beneficial, however much annoyance it may have caused the State authorities administering the fund and however irritating it may have been to the friends of State accident insurance. It has had the effect of keeping the attention of employers, labor organizations, and the legislature focused on the State fund, and has kept the administration of the fund alert, eager to avail itself of any helpful suggestion for increased administrative efficiency, or correcting weaknesses in procedure or of classification of risks, for strengthening the system of rate making, or for the general improvement of the details of operation. At the same time there has been no fundamental change in the system of rate making or in the general plan of operation since the first compensation law went into effect.

EMPLOYERS AND LABOR SUPPORT FUND.

The result has been that the confidence of employers and workmen in the administration of the compensation law and their faith in State insurance as the best and cheapest method of securing the benefits of the law for the injured employees have steadily increased. The law—which was first made optional for employers, when enacted in 1911—was made compulsory in 1913 on all employers employing regularly five or more employees, and the State fund was continued as the principal, if not sole, carrier of this insurance. It seems, indeed, to have been the intent of the legislature to make the State insurance fund the only carrier of workmen's compensation, but the wording of the statute was not clear, and a decision of the State commissioner of insurance in 1915 allowed the private insurance companies to write workmen's compensation. In 1917 the general assembly, with the full approval of both the Ohio Manufacturers' Association and the Ohio Federation of Labor, made the State fund the sole carrier of workmen's accidental insurance, and the right of the legislature to exclude the private insurance companies from this field was later sustained by both State and Federal courts. The law permits employers, under certain conditions, to carry their own risks, and it was from this class of employers that the private insurance companies secured their business prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court upholding the right of the State legislature to exclude such companies from writing compensation insurance. Since that decision the number of Ohio employers who elect to carry their own risks has steadily decreased, contrary to a statement recently made by the publicity bureau of the private insurance companies. On March 1, 1919, there were 952 self-insurers; on July 1, 1922, the number was 429. The number insured in the State fund on the latter date was 23,183. Self-insurance is a legitimate and profitable practice for companies whose scale of operations is large and whose employees are sufficiently numerous to give a wide distribution of risks, and these are, in the main, the companies which have elected to carry their own insurance under the Ohio law. These large companies would carry their own insurance, if permitted to do so, even if the law permitted private insurance companies to write compensation insurance.

ATTACKS INSTIGATED BY COMMERCIAL INSURANCE AGENTS.

The private insurance companies have not ceased their hostile criticism of the Ohio law since they have lost their right to do business in the State. They probably have no considerable expectation that the law will be changed so as to permit them to compete with the State fund, but keeping up the agitation has the effect of making employers, employees, and legislators in other States uncertain as to the merits of State insurance and delays in these States the adoption of the exclusive State fund plan. Since the State fund in Ohio is the "largest carrier of compensation insurance in the United States," it is obviously of great advantage to the private companies to supply "evidence" and arguments tending to show that this fund has proved a failure, and thus prevent, for a time at least, the spread of the idea. The private insurance companies do not, of course, appear in the open in this fight. The legislative campaign against the State fund has been conducted in the names of various organizations, which are apparently acting independently of one another, but even a superficial acquaintance with their methods and personnel always shows that though the voice be that of Jacob "the hands are the hands of Esau."

It must not be gathered that all the criticism of the administration of the Ohio State insurance fund has been insincere or unwarranted. The attacks instigated by the private insurance companies have at times been made by employers who are earnestly opposed to the principle of State insurance of any sort. Others have felt that they were not properly rated by the actuaries of the State fund or they have been dissatisfied with the way certain claims for compensation by their own employees have been handled by the commission administering the act. It is not to be expected that any plan of insurance will escape criticism and it is not to be supposed that this criticism will always be either dishonest or unwarranted. But the great majority of Ohio employers who have insured in the State insurance fund have been convinced that they have in this way secured insurance in a cheaper manner than could otherwise have been obtained, and that their injured employees have been provided with medical service and compensation for lost time with reasonable promptness and in such a way as to reduce to a minimum the friction between employer and employed which is likely to arise in connection with injuries received in the course of employment.

EMPLOYERS ACTIVELY OPPOSED PRIVATE INSURANCE TACTICS.

The Ohio Manufacturers' Association is much the most influential association of employers in the State. It is anything but socialistic in its tendencies, and its officers have been unusually, perhaps unduly, suspicious of legislation that looked in the direction of increased participation by the State in industry or interference by the State with the private management of industry. Yet this association has, from the very beginning of workmen's compensation in Ohio, given its hearty support to the commission administering the act, and it has been, and still is, active in its opposition to the efforts of the private insurance companies to secure the right to write workmen's compensation insurance in Ohio.

The private insurance companies in their campaign against State funds have laid great emphasis on the idea of "monopoly" in this field, seeking to take advantage of the popular fear of monopolies which often overlooks the fact that a monopoly conducted by the State itself is undertaken in the public interest because competition has proved wasteful or ineffective, and is therefore to be distinguished from private monopolies which are usually opposed to the public interest. Competition with the State fund in the field of workmen's compensation means that if the State is actively to compete with the private insurance companies it must employ a large force of solicitors, which, of course, adds very materially to the expenses of administration. On the other hand, if the State does not compete, the result will be that only the poor risks will come to the State fund. Such risks the private insurance companies do not care to accept or, if they do accept them, do so only at rates which the would-be insurers regard as prohibitive.

The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics has recently published Bulletin No. 301, entitled "Comparison of Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Administration," which shows that both these results obtain in the States which have competition between their State funds and the private insurance companies. Some of the competitive State funds write very little insurance because "they have not sufficient employees to go out and get business." It is the policy of other State funds "not to solicit business, but simply to take whatever comes to them." Dr. Carl Hookstadt, the author of this report, states that for every dollar collected by stock-insurance companies (much the most numerous of the privately organized accident-insurance companies) writing compensation insurance in this country, 38 cents goes for expenses and profits. For other carriers the expense ratios are as follows: "Mutual companies, 20 per cent; competitive State funds, 10.6 per cent; and exclusive State funds, 4 per cent." In Ohio the State fund operates at an expense ratio of less than 4 per cent. With such a difference in costs, it is not surprising that the stock companies should be eager to convince employers that State funds are badly managed and that they are inimical to the interests of both employers and workmen. Owing to the large scale of operations of the Ohio fund and its low costs of operation, the attacks of the insurance companies have been largely concentrated on this fund.

IMPARTIAL ACTUARIES PRAISE OPERATION OF FUND.

The earlier attacks, we have seen, were directed against the constitutionality of the Ohio fund and later against its exclusive feature. These attacks having failed in the courts, the enemies of the fund next began to question its solvency. Even the most ardent advocates of private insurance could hardly claim that, as long as the managers of a State fund could control the rates, there could be any insolvency in the ordinary acceptation of that term, so the claim was set up that the actuarial basis on which the fund was operating was faulty and that the premiums being collected under the rates established were insufficient to meet all claims against the fund and to maintain reserves sufficient to provide against contingencies.

Appreciating the danger that this claim if left unanswered would tend to create uneasiness in the minds of employers and employees, the Ohio industrial commission decided in 1919 to have the State insurance fund audited and analyzed by actuaries outside the State, and, in order to create confidence in the minds of employers, employees, and the public in the impartiality of the investigation, the commission invited the State auditor, the secretary of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, and the secretary of the Ohio Federation of Labor to act as a committee to select the examiners. These gentlemen accepted the responsibility and named as examiners the late E. H. Downey, special deputy of the Pennsylvania insurance department, and Miles M. Dawson, consulting actuary of New York City, two gentlemen whose integrity and qualifications for the task could not be questioned. Doctor Downey personally conducted the examination while Mr. Dawson checked his findings and went over with the actuary for the Ohio fund the method of computing the rates to go into effect the following year.

The results of the examination were such that both examiners declared the State fund solvent and gave high praise to the industrial commission for the spirit of fairness with which it had administered the compensation act and the "extreme, even excessive, economy" with which the State fund had been administered.

LARGEST BENEFITS AT LOWEST COST.

The commission had invited the examiners to offer criticisms of the administration and to point out ways in which improvements could be made. Doctor Downey offered a number of criticisms, for the most part directed against the niggardly manner in which the legislature had made appropriations for the administration of the compensation act, but he also called attention to certain weaknesses in the procedure of securing and handling reports of injuries. He also made helpful suggestions as to methods by which greater promptness in settling claims for compensation could be attained. In offering these criticisms, Doctor Downey said:

"In all fairness, it should be added that the record of the Ohio State fund, even in respect to promptness of claim settlement, will compare favorably with the record of any insurance carrier. The criticisms herein made do not imply that the fund is more remiss in this matter than other insurance carriers, but only that it is less prompt than can fairly be expected of a fund conducted by the State for the sole and express purpose of securing the prompt and full payment of compensation benefits."

The spirit in which these criticisms were received by the commission is shown by the fact that the procedure in handling claims was so modified that the average interval between the date of injury and the date of first payment, which was 55 days in 1919 has since been reduced to 33 days in 1922. This, as the report by Doctor Hookstadt shows, compares favorably with the best records made in other States where either State funds or private companies are made responsible for the payments.

It is typical of the methods by which the private insurance companies have conducted the campaign against the Ohio State fund that, in a pamphlet recently put out by the publicity bureau maintained by the casualty companies, these minor criticisms of the administration of the Ohio fund made in the Downey report are cited throughout as though they were characteristic of that report, and no mention is made of the high indorsement of the management of the fund given by both Doctor Downey and Mr. Dawson. The latter concludes his review of Doctor Downey's findings with the following statement: "All told, the greatest and most successful demonstration in this country of the possibilities of the largest benefits at the lowest cost from a workmen's compensation law has been achieved by the Ohio State industrial commission and the management of the Ohio State insurance fund, as is conclusively shown by the examiner's report."

The report just cited naturally gave no aid and comfort to the private insurance companies, and they immediately took steps to secure an official investigation and report on the State fund made by an actuary of their own selection. A change in the political complexion of the legislature soon afforded the desired opportunity and a second audit of the fund was made the same year as that in which the Downey-Dawson report was made.

OPPOSITION PROPAGANDA "FOR USE IN OTHER STATES."

Without entering into an account of the way in which this second investigation was brought about and the way in which the examiner was selected and without discussing the question of his competency to make such an examination, all of which matters are dealt with in a minority report of the legislative committee which assumed the responsibility for the investigation, we may say that the examiner reported that in his opinion "at the time stated the fund was solvent and in possession of a substantial surplus." He criticized the administration of the fund on the following grounds: (1) It had not maintained a system of control accounts whereby a trial balance could be taken at any time. (2) It failed to distinguish between the statutory surplus fund and the general surplus available for contingencies and for distribution of dividends, and as a result of this failure the statutory surplus fund was allowed to remain at too low a figure. (3) No account was taken of the physical condition of an employer's plant in the system of rate making. (4) There was undue delay in making payments to injured workmen. This last criticism was merely a repetition of that made by Doctor Downey, and the commission was already taking steps to remedy the matter.

The first three criticisms do not deal with matters which are fundamental in the administration of the law. They have to do with technical matters of accounting and actuarial practice, and the most that can be said for them is that they relate to matters concerning which there is genuine disagreement among accountants and actuaries as to the correct practice to follow.

The failure of the legislative committee, to which the report of the examiner was presented, to make any use of it to secure improvements or important changes in the administration of the Ohio fund shows that the report was wanted largely for consumption in other States where it was used as a basis for arguments against the adoption of the principle of a State fund. In Minnesota, for example, within a very few weeks after the above-mentioned actuary had made his report to the Ohio legislative committee, he appeared as an expert before a commission of the Minnesota Legislature appointed to examine into workmen's compensation, and he there repeated the criticisms he had made against the Ohio State fund, but he admitted that in appearing as an expert witness he was in the paid service of the Federation of Insurance Companies.

"REFORMS" THAT WOULD INCREASE COST.

Within the past year another investigation—not an actuarial one—has been conducted into the workings of the Ohio compensation law, and some comparison has been made with the experience with compensation laws in other States. This investigation has been made by a committee of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce. Some of the recommendations made by this committee to the industrial commission deal with matters of classification of risks and with rate making and can not be discussed here for want of space. Most of them if adopted would greatly increase the costs of administration which, there is reason to believe, was the object aimed at, and it is extremely doubtful if they would secure better results than the present system of making rates based on experience. The commission has given these recommendations careful consideration, but has not considered them to have sufficient merit to make it worth while to ask from the legislature the additional appropriations which would be necessary to put them in force.

Of the recommendations made by the Cincinnati committee to the legislature, most of them are worthy of serious consideration and possibly of adoption. Such are the recommendations for an increase in the scale of weekly compensation for certain classes of dependents and for a reduction of the waiting period. There is merit also in the recommendation that the employer be relieved of the so-called "open liability" which he now faces as a result of employees having the right to bring suit under the liability laws, in lieu of making application for compensation under the compensation act, in those cases where it is claimed that the employer is guilty of willful negligence through failure to comply with the safety laws of the State or with the rules which the commission may make intended to secure safe working conditions. The industrial commission has at various times adopted the valuable practice of organizing committees of employers and employees in each of the industries in which accidents are most likely to occur to draw up a safety code for that industry, with the expectation of then issuing an order putting this code in operation as a binding rule of the commission. In Ohio rules of the industrial commission have the force and effect of statutes. Owing, however, to this open liability to which the employer is subject, the commission hesitates to put these safety codes into operation, for they would greatly increase the danger which the employers run from damage suits under the liability laws. A valuable means of lessening accidents is thus not fully used. It is doubtful, however, whether the recommendation of the Cincinnati committee that this open liability be abolished by legislation is a practicable one. A constitutional amendment is probably necessary.

The recommendation that "in order that the commission shall have sufficient funds for the efficient operation and for the payment of adequate salaries to personnel of those operating the workmen's compensation act, the expense incident to the operation of the Ohio workmen's fund to be borne by the premiums collected, with the exception that the salaries of the commissioners be paid from the general administration fund," is one that on the face of it appears to have a good purpose behind it. There is room for a genuine difference of opinion concerning the wisdom of its adoption.

COMMERCIAL INSURANCE FEARS GOOD SHOWING OF STATE FUND.

Most of the valid criticisms made against the administration of the State insurance fund have been due to this inability of the commission to secure and retain a well-trained force of subordinates large enough to secure maximum efficiency in handling claims for compensation, and this was recognized in the report made by Doctor Downey. If the expense of operating the fund were charged to the premium account, there is no doubt but that the commission could in this way secure the funds sufficient for efficient service. But this in turn might lead to abuses and extravagance. Politicians would be constantly urging the commission to find places for needy friends, since to provide for them would make no drain on the public funds.

One suspects that the real motive for this recommendation of the Cincinnati committee, and for the one which, if adopted, would require the commission annually to make a physical inspection of every manufacturing plant, is to be found in the further recommendation of the committee that "a well-regulated plan of competitive compensation insurance" be adopted in Ohio. One does not proceed far in the consideration of any of the numerous plans for the "reform" of the Ohio workmen's compensation law which emanate from parties not directly concerned with the administration of the law until he discovers the cloven hoof of the private insurance companies.

If only the general assembly can be induced to adopt measures which will so increase the costs of administering the State fund that these costs will approximate the costs of solicitation and administration by the stock companies, these companies will not have constantly to face in other States the unfavorable comparison which their own experience affords to the experience of the Ohio fund whenever the question of adopting a State fund comes up for legislative consideration in these States. There is, also, the lingering hope that they may be able to thrust their noses into the Ohio tent.

A CAMPAIGN OF MISREPRESENTATION.

In conclusion this much may be said with the utmost assurance: Whatever may be the situation in other States, there is not now in Ohio, nor has there been, any widespread demand in recent years to take away from the State insurance fund its legal right to be the sole carrier of workmen's compensation insurance. The administration of that fund is not perfect, and valuable improvements in its administration and in the way of further accident prevention could be made if the legislature would be more generous in the appropriations for this service. The one serious charge which can be made against the administration of workmen's compensation in Ohio is that of political interference with its appointments when a change takes place in the State administration. The private insurance companies are mainly responsible for this political interference by constantly making the administration of the State fund an issue in the political campaigns and before the legislature. It is a tribute to the watchful care of the organized manufacturers and the organized laborers of the State that, so far, all efforts to secure important modifications in the act made by outside influences have failed. It is not to be expected, however, that in the near future the private casualty insurance companies will cease to misrepresent the administration of the Ohio fund and the attitude of the majority of Ohio employers toward that administration, nor that they will cease their attacks on the reports of Government investigators who report the growing success and popularity of the exclusive State-fund plan. These companies are fighting for their lives in other States and, under such circumstances, the reports of the success of an exclusive State fund are a constant menace to them and they are bound to continue their efforts to discredit such reports.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT REPORT.

I wish now to call attention to the most thorough and comprehensive impartial inquiry yet made in this country into the actual operation of the different methods of insurance under our workmen's accident compensation laws:

The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, under the direction of Mr. Carl Hookstadt, has just completed an investigation of compensation-insurance systems in 21 States and 2 Canadian Provinces. Included in the investigations were 9 States with exclusive State funds, 9 with competitive State funds, and 5 with no State funds.

It was found that in 1919 stock companies wrote about $91,000,000 in premiums, the mutual companies $27,000,000, and the State funds $33,000,000. "On the whole, comparing the best State funds with the best insurance carriers, which Mr. Hookstadt considered the fairest method of comparison, "the State funds are superior. They are certainly superior as regards cost; they are equal as regards financial security; and they are a little better as regards service."

Mr. Hookstadt also found that the dual system of administration under a competitive system compared unfavorably with the administration of an exclusive fund. "In a competitive state the commission, instead of doing things, sees to it that somebody else does the work. The commission supervises, follows up, and checks up the insurance carriers who are supposed to make the payments. It takes almost as much time and costs as much money and requires as many employees to do the follow-up work, if it is to be done adequately, as it does to do the work originally. * * * In an exclusive-fund State accidents are reported to the commission only; under a competitive system accidents are reported by the employer to the insurance company and also to the commission. Furthermore, under the latter system both the insurance company and the commission must receive and investigate compensation claims, which results in unnecessary duplication of effort."

The cost of this dual system of administration is emphasized by comparison of the total administrative expense in exclusive-fund States and in competitive States. The administrative costs of the former "are stated in thousands of dollars, whereas the latter run into millions. For example, compare the exclusive State fund of Ontario—$152,000—with the competitive-insurance State of California—$2,582,000—or the exclusive State fund of Ohio—$279,000—with the competitive-insurance State of Pennsylvania—$4,866,000—and the private-insurance State of Illinois—$2,876,000.

The cost of compensation insurance to employers under different insurance systems may be best indicated by the proportion of insurance premiums devoted to expenses and profits of the carrier. "The average expense ratio of stock companies is approximately 37½ per cent; of mutual companies, about 20 per cent; of competitive State funds, about 12½ per cent; and of exclusive State funds, from 5 to 7½ per cent. Under an exclusive State fund, therefore, the cost to employers would be 30 per cent less than under stock insurance and 12½ per cent less than under mutual insurance. The total saving to insured employers of the United States, if all were insured in exclusive State funds, would be over $30,000,000 annually.

"As regards service, * * * a comparison of the best managed State fund with one of the best managed private companies shows that the best State fund is more prompt in its payments than the best private company. Another significant fact developed by the investigation is that self-insured employers, whom one would expect to pay promptly, are no more prompt in this respect than either State funds or private carriers. As regards liberality of payment, most of the State funds are more liberal in this respect than either stock or mutual companies."

Investigations of commercial insurance company practices in Illinois and New York showed serious underpayments and evasions on the part of certain carriers.

As to security to both employer and employee, Mr. Hookstadt finds failure or insolvency "practically inconceivable as far as the exclusive State funds are concerned," and further, "thus far not a single injured workman has lost one cent of compensation because of the insolvency of State insurance funds, competitive or exclusive, nor has any large mutual company become insolvent. On the other hand, there have been several disastrous failures of private stock companies during the last three or four years. These failures have resulted in hundreds of thousands of dollars in unpaid claims."

TESTIMONY OF PENNSYLVANIA EXPERT.

I want to call particular attention to three letters which I am inserting in the RECORD from Hon. Harry A. Mackey, chairman of the workmen's compensation board, department of labor and industry of the State of Pennsylvania, for the past eight years, to Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, of Wyoming, Hon. CLYDE N. KELLY, of Pennsylvania, and to myself:

LETTER TO MR. MONDELL.

JANUARY 18, 1923.

Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At the request of Congressman CLYDE KELLY, of Pennsylvania, some time since I submitted a few of my thoughts in regard to the Fitzgerald bill providing for workmen's compensation for the District of Columbia. I have been requested by those deeply interested in the bill to write directly to you that after a very wide experience in compensation matters in Pennsylvania and an impartial observation of the operation of all insurance carriers, I believe that the District of Columbia presents too small a field and the pay roll exposure is too limited to make competitive insurance either profitable or attractive. I believe that the institution of a State fund is really essential to successful and economical administration. I say this with absolute fairness toward all insurance carriers. In Pennsylvania we have treated them all alike, giving them all a fair field and extending favors to none, and with our tremendous industrial undertakings the field is sufficiently large to guarantee prosperity to them all; but with so limited a field as the District of Columbia, a State fund could not exist in competition with the other companies and I consider a State fund very essential to the thorough and complete operation of the law.

Trusting that you will not consider these observations intrusive or a trespass upon your time, I remain,

Yours very sincerely,

HARRY A. MACKEY.

LETTER TO MR. KELLY.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD OF PENNSYLVANIA,
December 12, 1922.

Hon. CLYDE M. KELLY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am complying with your invitation to analyze and criticize the Fitzgerald bill.

In the first place, I am very much pleased that your act has substituted the word "injury" for "accident." The experience of the States that have frankly included industrial diseases in their schedules has been negligible as far as increased costs are concerned.

I have no experience that will justify me in commenting upon the inclusion of domestic service.

As far as including agricultural workers is concerned, I am thoroughly in sympathy with the idea. With modern agricultural implements in vogue, there seems to me to be no difference in the risks of the farm and the factory.

Your compensation of 66⅔ per cent is taken from the majority of the States of the Union.

You have provided a very just way of bringing adequate compensation to the employee who has suffered two partial disabilities and at the same time charging his immediate employer with only that disability that he suffered while in his employ.

I am very much interested in your penalty clause, and trust that it will stand the test in the courts, for I am very anxious to see one included in our Pennsylvania law. We have had some sad experience with uncompensated injuries that workmen have suffered while in the employ of irresponsible employers.

My judgment is that the bill is very admirably drawn and its benefits are properly distributed.

Insurance: As far as Pennsylvania is concerned, it has always been the policy of our board to refrain from advocating any particular form of indemnity. We have thus avoided any acrimonious debate.

In defense, however, of your proposed fund, in view of the limited number of employees affected in the District and the rather non-hazardous undertakings of your employers compared with a State like Pennsylvania, I might be pardoned if I indulged in the following suggestions and criticisms as to the insurance provisions of your bill:

Our State fund has been very successful, as I heretofore indicated in a communication to Congressman FITZGERALD.

In the District of Columbia, with its limited exposure from the compensation-insurance standpoint, a competitive State fund could not survive, for the obvious reason that it would not be able to secure enough premiums to meet its overhead and pay losses and maintain the proper reserves, etc. As it is inconceivable that only insurance companies would be allowed to transact business in the District, the apparent answer is to have a compulsory State fund.

I have not been able to find anywhere in the bill that a penalty is provided for nonpayment of premium within a reasonable time. It seems to me that provision should be made that an employer should be compelled to pay a penalty if his premium is not paid within, say, 60 days from the date bill is rendered.

It appears to me that the section of the bill providing 5 per cent which should be added each year to the surplus should be changed to read "not over 5 per cent," as it is entirely probable that there will be some years when the entire amount of 5 per cent will not be necessary to add to the surplus.

Most respectfully yours,

HARRY A. MACKEY,
Chairman Pennsylvania Compensation Board.

LETTER TO MR. FITZGERALD.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY,
WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD,
Harrisburg, June 20, 1921.

Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD,
House Committee on District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I understand that at a recent meeting before the congressional committee when a compensation and insurance act for the District of Columbia was under discussion that some animadversions were made upon the Pennsylvania State workmen's insurance fund by an employee or employees of the bureau of workmen's compensation of Pennsylvania that have excited considerable unfavorable comment.

I have received several letters of inquiry about the correctness of any criticisms that were directed against the fund. My attention has been called to the matter by Governor Sproul, of Pennsylvania, who is extremely proud of the success of the fund and its achievements under this administration. I am writing this letter at his direction and with his utmost approval.

I regret the fact that when I was invited to attend this conference by a telegram from Congressman FOCHT, of Pennsylvania, that my official duties prevented my accepting the committee's invitation. Had I been able to have been there, we certainly would have had no criticism offered on the Pennsylvania State fund. I have not been fully advised as to what representations were made except by extracts from the newspapers, but I desire to assure the committee that any hostile criticism to the fund was gratuitous and personal on the part of those who made it, and in no way represented the official opinion of the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Board.

* * * * * * *

* * * While I would decline to gratuitously offer any suggestion in regard to the Pennsylvania State fund that might appear as expressing a desire upon my part to further its interests over and above those of its competitors, nevertheless, now that it has been assaulted, I consider it my duty as one who probably is in the best position in Pennsylvania to know of its services to come to its defense.

The fund was created, as I have stated, by an act of the legislature of 1915. It was not intended to launch the State of Pennsylvania into the insurance business, but the original purpose of the State fund was to offer the employers of Pennsylvania protection at cost, where the pure premium would not have to be loaded to provide for the tremendous overhead expenses that the old-line companies are compelled to carry. It was also intended to be a regulator of insurance rates, and therefore the legislature gave to the State fund, in order that it might start under propitious circumstances, the sum of $300,000. It must be borne in mind that this was not a loan but was absolutely a subsidy. Likewise, the legislature of 1917, for the same purpose, gave our State fund $200,000, making a total of $500,000 by two succeeding legislatures.

By the terms of the act the State fund is managed by or is under the control of a commission composed of the State treasurer, the commissioner of labor and industry, and the insurance commissioner. The insurance department of our State a short time ago subjected the State fund to a most exhaustive and rigid examination. Its report shows that on December 31, 1920, the total assets were $6,048,555. It had a total surplus of $2,766,145. This surplus existed after the very fullest legal reserve had been set up as against all outstanding claims, and at that time this reserve protected every possible contingency in each case, with obligations that might possibly extend into the next 16 years, amounting to $2,126,076.

The State fund has further protected itself, notwithstanding the setting up of this great reserve, by reinsuring its funds as against catastrophe that might involve it in liability between the sums of $200,000 and $500,000. During 1920 the State fund wrote premiums amounting to $3,186,668, and its expense ratio was 10.5 per cent, while its claim ratio was 42.6 per cent.

I am only stating the facts, and therefore I will not compare these figures with those of other insurance companies—your committee can do that. I must state, however, that you will find but one insurance carrier doing business in Pennsylvania during that period that wrote business at a lower expense ratio, and that was a company whose total premiums only amounted to $16,000 for the year. It is only fair for me to state also that during that period official figures will show that the average expense ratio of all insurers of Pennsylvania was 29.3 per cent, of participating companies 17.4 per cent, and of stock companies 38 per cent.

At the beginning of the present year the State fund gave to the State treasurer of Pennsylvania the sum of $500,000 in cash, thus handing back to our State treasurer the two presents which the legislature had given to it. It was able to do this after charging its subscribers a rate of 10 per cent below the manual, paying a dividend to its subscribers each year of 15 per cent, and to its insurers in the coal regions, which represents the most hazardous risks in industry, 10 per cent. The State fund is now engaged in paying an extra dividend of 15 per cent to all policyholders for the year 1920, making a return in cash of 30 per cent to commercial policyholders, 25 per cent to coal policyholders, in addition to the 10 per cent lower initial rate.

Under the system of administration peculiar to Pennsylvania, if the injured employee and the employer fail to agree upon certain features of the accident, thus precluding them from the possibility of executing a compensation agreement, the employee files a claim petition with one of our 12 referees, a hearing takes place before this particular referee, he either awards compensation or disallows the same, then either party can appeal to the Workmen's Compensation Board (we are really the supreme court of the referee). Therefore, we enjoy a constant survey of the work of each insurance carrier and self-insurer in the State. We are in touch with labor, the employer, the insurance carriers, and the self-insurers. We find that the State fund enjoys the most hearty support of organized labor, so much so that labor is an advocate of a monopolistic State fund. This favorable attitude of the workingman toward the State fund must necessarily have been brought about because of promptness of service, liberality of distribution of benefits, and willingness to extend medical benefits beyond the limitation of our law.

I am not raising the standard of the State fund in order to make invidious comparison against any insurance carriers of our State. We have had trouble with none and have been accorded cheerful cooperation by all. What I have written has been prompted by a desire to do justice to the Pennsylvania State fund and as a response to many requests so to do. I remain,

Yours very truly,

HARRY A. MACKEY,
Chairman Workmen's Compensation Board of Pennsylvania.

VIEWS OF LABOR.

Hon. Warren E. Tarbell, of the Massachusetts Senate, a good friend of our colleague, Mr. TAGUE, has collected the opinions of some prominent representatives of labor on workmen's compensation insurance.

John P. Frey, secretary of the committee on resolutions of the American Federation of Labor, says:

In considering the matter of providing compensation for the victims of industrial accidents, there are three elements which we should consider, namely, the employer, the employee, and the State or society. These are the only elements that are necessarily involved in the matter and no other element has a right to demand recognition in whatever plan might be adopted to accomplish this purpose. The ambulance-chasing lawyer and the professional insurance adjuster were the twin evils of the old system. The methods in the old days were so odious, both to the workers and to the public, that if we adopt any form of workmen's compensation law that retains one of these two agencies, we are not going to accomplish the results that we hope for and have a right to expect.

THE OHIO LAW.

In connection with the administration of the Ohio workmen's compensation law, the Industrial Commission of Ohio about two years ago (1919) issued a circular in which the statement was made that if the employers of Ohio had been paying premiums into the State insurance fund at the same rate of premium that the insurance companies were charging the employers of New York, they would have paid more than $5,000,000 a year more. Carl Hookstadt, of the Federal Labor Bureau, last year made an investigation of insurance companies and State funds in connection with the administration of the workmen's compensation laws in various States. In his report Mr. Hookstadt states that exclusive State funds are far superior to any other insurance carrier. He also states that if the employers of the United States had been paying premiums into exclusive State funds it would have meant a saving of $30,000,000 a year to these employers.

Now, this $30,000,000 is a burden on industry. It must be paid out of the wealth created in industry. It is true the employers pay the premiums in the first instance, but ultimately the consumer pays it. I believe, therefore, it will do the employers more good, and I know it will do society more good if they put this $30,000,000 into the pay envelope of their employees or allow the consumers of their products to get the benefits of it than to put it into the coffers of insurance companies.

Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor and also president of the International Council of Printing Tradesmen:

"Contrary to the opinions of some labor men, the American Federation of Labor unequivocally indorses the principles upon which the Ohio workmen's compensation law is founded and certainly approves that legislation as a model law to be followed in all other States."

James Duncan, of Quincy, Mass., first vice president of the American Federation of Labor and also international president of the Granite Cutters' International Union:

"In the best judgment of the great American Federation of Labor after much study, consideration, and attention had been given the subject, the American Federation of Labor stands firmly and squarely in favor of the Ohio workmen's compensation law as a model for operation in other States."

Daniel Tobin, of Cambridge, Mass., treasurer American Federation of Labor, also general president International Brotherhood Teamsters, Chauffeurs, and Helpers:

"My opinion is that it is (Ohio compensation law) the best workmen's compensation law that we have in any State in the country."

Jacob Fischer, vice president American Federation of Labor and international secretary-treasurer Barbers' International Union:

"We favor workmen's compensation insurance for every State and we think the Ohio law the best of any State."

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Whereas the American Federation of Labor at its last annual convention unanimously indorsed the Ohio workmen's compensation law and requested each affiliated State federation to seek similar legislation; and

Whereas the officers of some State federations possibly misunderstood the intent of this request: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, again indorses the Ohio workmen's compensation law, and we urge the officers and members of State federations to petition for and work for the adoption of workmen's compensation legislation modeled after that form now in operation in the State of Ohio: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolve be sent by our secretary to each State federation and central labor council at the close of this convention.

THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

As I said before, I think it is very important that Members become familiar with the report by the House Committee on the District of Columbia, which on February 8, 1922, recommended the passage of my bill.

The committee in its report said:

This bill is intended to remedy the situation arising from the failure of Congress thus far to provide a workmen's compensation law for upward of 100,000 private employees in the District of Columbia.

Forty-three States, in addition to Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, have now substituted more or less enlightened workmen's compensation laws for the outworn theory of employers' liability, to the mutual benefit of capital and labor, with resultant increase of harmony in industrial relations. Five States only, to wit, Arkansas, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Florida, have failed to pass such a law. Congress has already signified its approval of the compensation principle by enacting in 1916 an accident compensation law for civilian employees of the United States, and later extended it to the District's public employees. The Government now extends protection to 600,000 of its own employees, of whom 75,000 are in the District of Columbia.

Private employees in the District have not only been overlooked in the general march of compensation progress but are also under the peculiar disadvantage of being without the scant protection of an employers' liability statute or accident reporting law.

In the District there are, according to reliable estimates, about 108,000 wageworkers in private employment who need the protection of this measure. As nearly as can be determined these workers suffer over 5,000 disabling accidents and approximately 40 fatal injuries yearly. According to reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the year 1920 shopmen of the Washington Terminal Railroad Co. alone suffered 184 accidents which resulted in incapacity for three days or more. For the vast majority of these the only remedy is public or private charity or the illusory one of a suit for damages under the outworn and discredited rules of the common law.

The industries of the District to be covered by this bill include, to mention only the more hazardous, one steel mill, two paper factories, numerous laundries, building operations, and the street railways and railroad terminals. Cases were related to the committee in which drivers of delivery wagons in the District, although seriously injured, went without recompense. There were others skilled in building construction maimed for life and reduced to the job of watchman who could not recover a cent because they had "assumed the risk." And it was testified that helpless widows and children of men crushed in the freight yards, not a stone's throw from our legislative halls, have been, in the absence of a protecting compensation law, thrown upon the community practically penniless. The District Committee believe that to permit such conditions to continue at our very doors would shock the best sense of every Member of Congress.

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL TESTED BY EXPERIENCE.

Every important provision of the bill here presented has been tested through practical experience under various of our 46 American accident compensation laws, not to mention Canada, where compensation legislation is now practically universal.

EMPLOYEES COVERED.

All employees except casual workers whose employment is not in the course of the trade, business, profession, or occupation of the employer will be eligible to compensation benefits under this bill. This feature is patterned after the New Jersey law, which has long given satisfaction, being the first American compensation law to go into effect and stay in effect. The committee believes that to exclude any class of worker other than "casuals" would be fallacious, for the reason that there is no industry unattended by danger. To the farm laborer, care of live animals and work with modern labor-saving machinery constitutes a hazard, while fire, boiling water, climbing stepladders and stairways, subjects domestic service to appreciable hazard. It is obvious that the hazard varies in different lines of work, and, therefore, that the amount of insurance premium will vary. In all cases the fact of occupational injury should be the test of the need for protection under an accident compensation law.

INJURIES COVERED.

All injuries sustained in the course of employment, except self-inflicted injuries, are covered and defined to include disease arising out of and in the course of employment. This follows the principle already sanctioned by Congress in the Federal employees' compensation law and by the laws of California, Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, and Wisconsin. It is now generally recognized that occupational diseases arising from daily employment in the handling of poisonous products are just as truly industrial injuries and just as deserving of compensation as many more spectacular accidents. For this reason the word "injury" has been used throughout this bill in place of the narrower term "accident." It is believed that few cases of occupational disease will arise in the District, but such as may occur will be included in the protection of this bill.

MEDICAL CARE.

In providing fully for such medical care as the nature of the injury may require the committee again follows the Federal employees' compensation law, as well as no less than 15 other jurisdictions as to allowance for medical treatment and 15 as to period of treatment. Experience has shown that inadequate medical care is poor economy, as it is likely to result in prolonging the period of disability for which compensation must be paid. Furthermore, in States where the amount allowed for medical care is limited, there appears to be a tendency on the part of physicians to charge the maximum. It is believed by the committee that economy is served by providing proper medical care, leaving charges to the discretion of the commission.

WAITING PERIOD.

Although medical care is always provided from the date of injury, it is not customary to pay cash compensation for the first few days of disability. This bill follows accepted practice in providing for a "waiting period," as the days immediately following the injury during which no cash compensation is paid are called. A waiting period of three days is believed sufficient to discourage trivial claims. This is in accord with the Maryland and Utah statutes, as well as the compensation act enacted by Congress covering public employees in the District.

SCALE OF COMPENSATION.

Beginning with the fourth day of disability, injured employees are to receive 66⅔ per cent of wages during disability. This standard has already been adopted by Congress and by 11 other laws, while in four additional States the scale is 65 per cent, or practically the same.

WEEKLY MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM.

A maximum weekly limit of $25 is no more than adequate. Oregon has established an upper level of $22.50, and in California, Hawaii, Missouri, North Dakota, and New York the limit is $20 or more.

There is also a minimum weekly limit below which compensation shall not go unless the injured employee's weekly wages are less. Seven dollars as a weekly minimum is regarded as conservative and exists also in Massachusetts, Michigan, Rhode Island, Utah, and Wyoming. Some laws are even more liberal than what is here recommended, the weekly minimum being as high as $7.50 in South Dakota, $7.69 under the Federal employees' law, $8 in Maryland, Minnesota, New York, and Oklahoma, while in Illinois it is $10 if there are dependents.

BURIAL BENEFIT.

Most laws allow in addition a modest sum to cover burial expenses. The sum here recommended, "not to exceed $150," is the same as is allowed in Alaska, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Illinois, Kansas, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota, Utah, and West Virginia. This is believed to be adequate, although it has been exceeded in Idaho, Maine, Michigan, and Rhode Island, where $200 is allowed.

ADMINISTRATION.

This bill sets up no new machinery. It is provided that the already existing United States Employees' Compensation Commission, which for more than five years past has satisfactorily administered compensation for Federal employees and for the past two years has also administered compensation for the District's public employees, shall administer the act. The commission is well qualified, and as the number of employees to be covered will be small compared to the total number of employees now handled by the commission, the committee believes that both efficiency and economy will be served by placing the administration of this act in the hands of such an experienced commission.

REHABILITATION.

Recognizing that cash compensation is far inferior to restored earning power, the committee has recommended that the commission assist industrial cripples to obtain appropriate training, education, and employment, and that they cooperate with the Federal Board for Vocational Education for this purpose.

COMPENSATION THE EXCLUSIVE REMEDY FOR THE EMPLOYEE.

Compensation under this measure is made the exclusive remedy for injured employees or for their dependents in case of death, and the employer who contributes to the fund is relieved from all liability for personal injuries or death sustained by his employees. If he fails to insure, he may be sued by the employee, and in such case can not avail himself of the common-law defenses of contributory negligence, fellow servant, or assumption of risk.

INSURANCE.

In creating rights and obligations which will extend over a long period of time it is necessary to surround them with safeguards for fulfillment. Compensation payments to dependent children often continue for 10 or more years, and an employer who is well able to pay a compensation award to-day may meet with unforeseen reverses to-morrow. To protect dependent beneficiaries against such contingencies, practically every American compensation law contains a provision requiring employers to insure their compensation risk.

The bill which we recommend is a compulsory compensation insurance act. The committee believes that it is because many have failed to distinguish between this type of compensation act and the ordinary elective type of act that much misunderstanding as to the best method of insurance has arisen. Under a compulsory compensation act, such as this, employers will be at the mercy of commercial insurance companies unless Congress in creating the obligation to insure at the same time provides an opportunity to insure at a reasonable cost.

All but four of the compulsory compensation acts in the United States establish compensation insurance funds to protect employers against exorbitant charges (Bulletin of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, No. 275, p. 14), and it has been thought advisable to do so here.

INSURANCE ASSESSMENTS SIMILAR TO TAX.

Discussion of the insurance fund has been befogged by talk of the "Government going into business." This phrase is inapplicable. In the leading case upholding the constitutionality of the compulsory insurance type of law (Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington, 243 U. S., 219) the United States Supreme Court gave its opinion that the assessments which employers are required to pay are in the nature of an "occupational tax" levied against industry to provide payments to those disabled in employment. We are clearly of the opinion that a State, in the exercise of its power to pass such legislation as reasonably is deemed necessary to promote the health, safety, and general welfare of its people, may regulate the carrying on of industrial occupations that frequently and inevitably produce personal injuries and disability with consequent loss of earning power—and may require that these human losses shall be charged against the industry, either directly or by publicly administering the compensation and distributing the cost among the industries affected by means of a reasonable system of occupation taxes. (Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington, 243 U. S. 243.) In other words, the Government acts merely as a collecting and disbursing agency. To turn this task of collecting employers' obligatory contributions over to an agency conducted for profit would hark back to the days when taxes were farmed out for private gain.

COMPETITION COSTLY AND WASTEFUL.

Unlike States with compulsory laws, most of those States having elective compensation laws have permitted insurance companies to carry whatever part of the risk they could secure. An official investigation into the relative merits of State funds and commercial insurance companies, conducted under direction of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, showed that the latter are more costly, they give no greater security, and they are somewhat inferior as regards service rendered. (Monthly Labor Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 138.)

At hearings before the committee the representative of insurance companies testified that of the premium charged by insurance companies about 37½ per cent is used in overhead expenses, only 62½ per cent reaching the beneficiaries. In other words, in making up their premium charges, to every dollar of benefits which they expect to pay, insurance companies add a charge of 60 cents for expenses. Their premium charges are apportioned approximately as follows:

	Per cent.
Acquisition cost	17½
Home office expense	8
Taxes	3
Claim adjustment	7
Inspections	2
Total overhead expenses	37½
Benefits paid for injuries	62½

In exclusive State funds the first three items are eliminated. They have, moreover, been able to reduce their other expenses to an average of 7½ per cent of premium charges (Monthly Labor Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 144), apportioning the premium as follows:

	Per cent.
Total overhead expenses	7½
Benefits paid for injuries	92½

A competitive State fund can not entirely eliminate acquisition expense, but even so its record for economy far exceeds that of casualty companies. In Pennsylvania, the home of the chairman of the committee, the competitive State fund has maintained an expense ratio of only 10.5 per cent, as compared with 38 per cent for the stock companies. The Pennsylvania fund has made the good record of accumulating a surplus of approximately $3,000,000 and paying back to the State $500,000 originally advanced to the fund. The chairman of the Pennsylvania workmen's compensation board, in a letter to the committee, states that the fund "was able to do this after charging its subscribers a rate of 10 per cent below the manual, paying a dividend to its subscribers each year of 15 per cent, and to its insurers in the coal regions, which represents the most hazardous risks in industry—10 per cent. The State fund is now engaged in paying an extra dividend of 15 per cent to all policyholders for the year 1920, making a return in cash of 30 per cent to commercial policyholders, 25 per cent to coal policyholders, in addition to the 10 per cent lower initial rate."

That part of the premiums collected from employers which is used up in overhead expenses, and therefore never reaches the workmen, is called the expense ratio. This expense ratio affords the simplest means of summing up the relative expenses of stock companies and State funds. The expense ratios given in the following table show conclusively the economy which may be gained by the insurance fund method of carrying the workmen's compensation risk:

Comparative expense ratios.[1]

	Average proportion of premiums used by overhead expenses.	Average proportion of premiums which reaches beneficiaries.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Stock companies	37½	62½
Mutual companies	20	20
Competitive State funds	12½	87½
Exclusive State funds	7½	92½

[1] Monthly Labor Review of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 144.

In Ohio, where the exclusive fund has been in force for some years, the expense ratio is less than 3 per cent.

Indeed, so great is the economy of the fund method of insurance, and especially the exclusive fund, which because of the small coverage the committee deems best for the District of Columbia, that, after the investigation mentioned above, the investigator for the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics reached the conclusion that "had every compensation State possessed an exclusive State fund and had all employers carrying compensation insurance insured therein, it would have saved these employers in the year 1919 at least $30,000,000." (Monthly Labor Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 144.)

With the exclusive fund it is therefore possible for the committee to plan for compensation on a liberal scale with the assurance that the expense to the employer will be no greater than in certain States which have a less liberal compensation law but a more expensive method of insurance.

FUND ABSOLUTELY SECURE.

The insurance-fund method has also recommended itself because of its absolute security. Not a single employee has lost one cent of compensation through the financial failure of State funds. In fact, insolvency is practically inconceivable because if premium income is insufficient it is only necessary to increase the rates. (Monthly Labor Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 154.) This bill provides for a reinsurance of the fund so that security against an unusual catastrophe is provided. Insurance companies, on the other hand, must commend themselves to customers and in spite of supervision are often tempted to reduce rates below the margin of safety.

Counsel for the Lockwood Investigating Commission in New York bases his conclusion that "private companies should be barred out of the field of workmen's compensation insurance on the ground that, inasmuch as the State very properly compels the employer to take out this class of insurance, it should provide the insurance and thus prevent the employer from being exploited as he now is for private profit," and says that "numerous instances were put into the record where the stock companies, instead of maintaining the rate fixed by agreement with the State fund and the mutuals, have cut the rate in half to large investors, thus repudiating the fundamental principle of rate making." If rates approved as the minimum necessary for safety are undercut to gain patronage there can be no security for either employer or injured workman. "The failure of such companies as the Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Co. of Utah, the Casualty Co. of America, and the Commonwealth Bonding & Insurance Co. of Texas resulted in thousands of dollars of unpaid compensation claims. In those States in which the law held both the employer and insurer individually liable these losses had to be met by the employers. In other States, in which employers are relieved of further liability when insured, the injured claimants were the sufferers. The legislature of California appropriated between $60,000 and $70,000 of public money to pay in full the larger claims of injured employees because of the bankruptcy of the Commonwealth Bonding & Insurance Co. of Texas. Many smaller claims have not yet been taken care of." (Monthly Labor Review, of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 153.)

STOCK COMPANIES INIMICAL TO INJURED WORKMEN.

The insurance companies before the committee stressed the contention that the excessive cost of insurance in private companies is justified by the "service" rendered. The committee fails to find merit in this contention.

As regards claim-investigation service, the work of the insurance claim agent, so far as it is impartial, only duplicates the work of the commission's investigators. The commission must supervise and check up payments by insurance companies in any event, and "it takes almost as much time and costs as much money and requires as many employees to do the follow-up work if it is to be done adequately as it does to do the work originally." (Monthly Labor Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 138.) Under the insurance-fund plan, the facts need be investigated by only one body, i. e., the commission.

Compensation laws are primarily for the benefit of injured workers, and if part of what is listed by insurance companies as claim-adjustment expense is used in defeating claims, what is "service" from the viewpoint of the insurance corporation may not always be "service" for the employee. The Connor investigation in New York State disclosed "underpayments on the part of insurance companies and self-insurers" which between 1915 and 1919 "deprived injured employees and their dependents of about $5,700,000." (Dawson, State Accident Insurance in America, p. 6.) Underpayments by insurance companies were likewise found during an investigation conducted by the industrial commission in Illinois. (Typewritten reports furnished to United States Bureau of Labor Statistics by Illinois Industrial Commission.) In view of these facts, the 7 per cent of premiums which insurance companies assert is necessary to maintain a proper claim-adjustment service can not safely be regarded as service to those whom these laws are designed to protect.

As to promptness of payments, the investigator of the Bureau of Labor Statistics found that, although no clear distinction could be drawn on a basis of promptness of payment between the average State fund and the average casualty company, "the best State fund has a better record as to promptness of payment than the very best insurance company." (Monthly Labor Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, December, 1920, p. 148.)

So far as service in promoting safety work is concerned, State funds have been less satisfactory, partially because this work has been undertaken by other State departments. Since insurance companies do not claim that safety work accounts for more than 2 per cent of their expenditures, however, this one element of superiority can hardly justify their claim that their great excess in cost over State funds represents superior service rendered. State funds can afford to double their expenses for safety work and still spend about 30 per cent less on overhead expenses than casualty companies.

INSURANCE FUND SELF-SUPPORTING.

The Government will not subsidize the insurance fund by paying its administrative expenses. The bill provides that all the expense of administering the fund is ultimately to be paid out of premium income. In other words, the fund is to be entirely self-supporting.

INSURANCE FUND DESIRED BY WORKERS.

Representatives of the American Federation of Labor and of labor organizations within the District appeared before the committee in support of this bill and in denunciation of any compensation bill in which private insurance should be permitted to take part. In the light of underpayments by insurance companies disclosed by the Connor investigation in New York and the industrial commission in Illinois, this distrust of insurance companies by workingmen is not difficult to understand.

INSURANCE FUND FAVORED BY EMPLOYERS.

Employers who have experienced the advantages of State-managed workmen's compensation insurance have also become its enthusiastic supporters. C. C. Colt, vice president of the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., says of the compensation insurance law that it "has saved employers and insured unfortunates thousands of dollars." (Monthly Bulletin of the Industrial Insurance Department of Washington.) In Ohio the manufacturers' association has repeatedly expressed satisfaction with the insurance fund. Employers in the mining region on the border between West Virginia and Virginia find the insurance fund of West Virginia so advantageous that they headed a movement to have a similar fund established in Virginia. In California, where the State fund is in competition with private companies, the State fund has given employers so much greater satisfaction that it has secured more than one-third of the entire business of the State.

Insurance funds are the rule in Canada, where they are the exclusive method of insurance in six out of the nine Provinces. Two years ago employers and employees in Manitoba, being dissatisfied with a statute permitting insurance by private companies, joined in securing its repeal and in the enactment of a new law providing for an exclusive insurance fund and more liberal benefits.

INSURANCE FUNDS TESTED BY EXPERIENCE OF 18 STATES.

In this country State insurance funds have been established in Ohio, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, North Dakota, Porto Rico, West Virginia, Wyoming, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Michigan, California, Colorado, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho, and in the first eight of these this is the exclusive method of insurance.

CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MAKE INSURANCE FUND DESIRABLE.

For the comparatively small area and the limited number of employees (about 108,000) to be covered by this legislation in the District of Columbia, the exclusive fund is especially recommended. A competitive fund, such as those which, in some of the larger areas, share the business with private agencies, might not, with so limited a number of employees to be protected, have sufficient coverage to make it a sound proposition. This but accentuates the desirability of making the District fund the one method of supplying all this new protection both to the employers as a whole and to all employees. Such a fund will be in effect a mutual organization for the purpose of meeting a newly created insurance obligation in the most secure and the most economical way.

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

This type of legislation has been upheld as constitutional by our highest court—especially in Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington (243 U. S. 219), and in other respects by N. Y. C. R. R. Co. v. White (243 U. S. 188)—and it is not expected that anyone will now seriously question the authority of the legislature to place a compensation measure on the statute books.

PRESENT LOCAL CONDITIONS.

A more recent investigation of conditions within the District of Columbia by Irene S. Chubb brings out strikingly the need for this legislation.

In her report she writes:

The principle of workmen's accident compensation was almost universally adopted in America a decade ago. Congress also extended this protection to public employees—both of the Federal Government and of the District of Columbia.

But the strange assumption apparently persists among some Congressmen that private employments in the District of Columbia are not hazardous.

To throw an up-to-date light on this question the American Association for Labor Legislation recently made new inquiries. The numerous human experiences collected in Washington read like a chapter out of the dark past, but they are very real right now to many industrious families living almost under the shadow of our National Capitol.

Congress has not only failed to provide for the 100,000 private employees within the District of Columbia a workmen's compensation law; Congress in all the years has neglected to enact even an employer's liability statute, and there is not even an accident-reporting law. When injured these employees are therefore peculiarly helpless, since, without any of the usual aids to recovery of damages, they must sue under the harsh, outgrown, and archaic rules of the common law.

As to the needs of the Fitzgerald compensation bill, carefully drafted to meet the peculiar conditions within the District, let the following typical cases speak to you:

CASE NO. 1.

"Steam fitter crushed by falling radiator—Widow receives no compensation: On September 25, F. B. was installing a 1,600-pound radiator in the Riggs National Bank when it fell and so completely crushed his chest, back, and legs that he died within two days. After paying hospital bills the widow was left practically without resources and has been forced to go to work to support herself. The Steam Fitters' Union collected money to pay the funeral expenses. All Mrs. B. has received from the employer is an offer of $100. The employer's insurers deny liability, and if the widow gets reasonable payment she will be forced to sue."

CASE NO. 2.

"Employee's leg is crushed while moving piano—Forced to seek charity: On May 23 a piano, which R. H. was helying to move, fell on his leg, causing a double fracture. He was in a hospital two months, and unable to work for three months longer. As his employers refused compensation he was forced to seek charitable relief during this period. He will never be able to resume heavy work."

CASE NO. 3.

"Wagon driver totally disabled by accident; family forced on charity: An accident while hauling a load of barrels in December, 1917, has made T. C. a wheel-chair invalid for life. He is so helpless that it would be unsafe for his wife to go out to work and leave the four young children in his care. The employer paid for moving them and gave them a month's rent, $16, and then disclaimed further responsibility. The family is 'on charity.'"

CASE NO. 4.

"Painter's foot amputated after fall from scaffold; receives no compensation: T. B., while painting a house late in October, fell from a scaffold, injuring his ankle so badly that the foot had to be amputated.

His employer tried to shift responsibility to an alleged subcontractor and paid nothing. Meanwhile, aside from $100 contributed by the Painter' Union, the only money coming to support his wife and five children is the earnings of the eldest daughter, $16.50 a week."

CASE NO. 5.

"Packing-house employee killed—widow and eight children forced upon charity: On June 26, 1919, G. B. was going by motor cycle on an errand for his employer when he collided with a truck which stalled ahead of him. He was killed. He left eight children and a wife who was at the time pregnant and practically destitute. The packing house disclaimed liability but, during the first few months, took up several collections among Mr. B's fellow employees. For two years the family was dependent on one charitable organization which then turned them over to another."

CASE NO. 6.

"Carpenter totally disabled for life by fall—received no compensation: On December 29, 1920, E. L. was working on the Grace Dodge Hotel. A barricade was removed, unknown to him, and he fell three stories, suffering seven breaks in one leg, nine in the other, a broken arm, a dislocated spine, a rupture, and dislocation of both knees. He was in a hospital three months and unable to work for a year and a half. His employers have not paid him a cent. Now he tries to work for his wife and three little girls, but—'It is so hard. What work I do is in agony. Broke up as I am, I am a ruined man, only 33 years old, and turning gray from worrying. God knows I want to see others get justice, for I did not.' The Carpenters' Union has helped out with $50 and Mrs. L. has been forced to go to work to eke out what little Mr. L. is able to earn."

CASE NO. 7.

"Electrician electrocuted by live wire—Widow receives no compensation: On October 18 the lights in the Mount Pleasant section failed. The Potomac Electric Power Co. sent J. M. to find the difficulty. While searching in a manhole he touched a live wire and was electrocuted instantly. In spite of J. M.'s 20 years of service the company has not paid the widow a cent. At her age it is improbable that she will ever be able to support herself."

CASE NO. 8.

"Electrician killed by fall from derrick—Widow and babe uncompensated: On October 13 R. H. was working on electric crane 50 feet above ground. Just after he had finished his work and lowered his tools, he fell and was instantly killed. He left a widow and a little girl of 4. The employer was not insured nor was he liable at common law."

CASE NO. 9.

"Carpenter loses eye when hit by flying nail head—Receives no compensation: On January 6, as C. B. was driving a nail, the head flew off and cut his eye so seriously that the eye had to be removed. He was in the hospital two weeks and unable to work for three months—a serious lay off for a man with wife and four young children. Yet his employer paid him no compensation. He was forced to seek help from the carpenters' union, which gave him $50."

CASE NO. 10.

"Laundress's arm crushed by mangle, receives no compensation: B. W., while working in the laundry of the Columbia Hospital had her arm caught in a mangle and crushed so badly that it had to be amputated below the elbow. Although cared for as a charity patient at the hospital, she has never been compensated for the loss of her arm."

CASE NO. 11.

"Painter's legs and back disabled by fall, receives no compensation: C. K., while painting a church fell and so injured his back and legs that he was disabled for about nine months. An expensive operation was necessary for his recovery. His employer disclaimed responsibility. To help this case the painters' union took up several collections and the neighbors raffled off embroidery."

CASE NO. 12.

"Scoop driver thrown and leg mashed by horse, forced to seek charity: While steering a horse-drawn scoop last February, T. G. was thrown under the horse, knocked unconscious, and leg badly injured. The employer refused to compensate him. While out of work he went heavily into debt to pay the doctor, and his wife and four little children were given aid by a charitable organization. Fear of getting further behind drove him back to work in three weeks, but nine months later his leg still pains him. And he is still paying off the debts."

CASE NO. 13.

"Carpenter totally disabled for life—induced to sign release for $700: On August 26, 1921, J. McD. was working on a scaffold when it broke down. He escaped with a compound fracture just above the ankle joint. He was in hospital one month, unable to do any work for a year, and has been certified by two doctors as unable ever to resume his trade. In the hospital an adjuster offered him $700 and induced him to believe that his bills would be paid and an easy job provided. To his amazement 'the employer stopped coming around with ice cream and fruit the moment my name went on what I understand now was a release.' To help meet the living expenses of McD.'s wife and eight children the local carpenter's union allowed him $70, and 'total disability' was awarded by his national union—a sum dependent upon length of membership. To pay the hospital bill of $87, doctor's bills of $135, and $2 a visit to a chiropractor, McD. was forced to mortgage his home."

These are only a few of the many cases which could be cited. Injuries such as these are piling up week after week. During every month of further unnecessary delay by Congress the list of dependent widows and children and industrial cripples will grow longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has five minutes remaining.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio says that the principal opponents to this bill are the insurance companies. Why should not they be? It means the entering wedge to the destruction of private insurance in this country. Suppose that this bill was for the purpose of providing that the Government should be the purchaser of all the cotton in this country, of all the wheat in this country, and all the grain in this country, absolutely wiping out all of this character of private business, why should not these gentlemen thus engaged be opposed to it? Every socialist in this House will vote for this bill; every person with socialistic tendencies may support it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I can not yield.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I would like to say to my friend a majority of this House, not socialists, will also support this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have a very serious doubt about that. It absolutely means socialism in insurance eventually and can mean nothing else. I can not yield further. It means establishing here what has helped to undermine Russia and destroy her as a Government.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the difference——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It means what is now undermining and destroying Germany as a Government. It means that we will be, if you will just listen to these insidious demands in reference to the protective methods asked for by that class and this class, a government of paternalism.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I can not. Why, we are just simply tending toward socialism faster, if you please, than Russia did 10 years ago. Faster, if you please, than Germany did five years ago. Why should we take over this business unless we are going to take over all character of insurance, and that is what it means. It means the destruction of the independent private insurance industries of this country, and it is not a very far step from that to Government ownership of everything, paternalism pure and simple. No one but a believer in State socialism can support this measure if he understands all its provisions. It provides that every character of relationship within a certain degree shall come within its provisions as its beneficiaries.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Gentlemen, can it be possible that this country, which is now trying to hold up what there is of stability in this world, is going to listen and yield to an appeal which has been and is the destroying force of Europe? We have been going a long ways in this direction, I will admit, but the time has come now when there should be a halt, and when the gentleman from Washington tells me that there is going to be a lot of people who have not socialistic tendencies who will vote for this bill, I want to say to that gentleman, unconsciously, perhaps, that whoever does so is lending aid and comfort to the doctrine of socialism.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will yield.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I helped to frame a law somewhat similar to this in the State of Washington which has worked out very satisfactorily, and they have it in the gentleman's own State of Indiana, and in 43 States of the Union.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Those are compensation laws and not State insurance laws.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. We do not think your State and my State are socialistic.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This tendency is prevailing very, very rapidly. I want to say to the gentleman from the State of Washington that it is time that those who are standing for things that are American, standing for things that are stable, standing for things that means the stabilization of the world, and if we are going to preserve what has made this country great, what has made it the envy and the admiration of the world, what has made it, if you please, foremost in everything that is worth while we should stop this thing and help to kill all things like it. I want to say this character of doctrine is gnawing at the vitals of this Government now and it will not be long until our destruction comes if it is permitted to continue.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. OLIVER. With reference to the statement of the gentleman from Washington, I do not think that the State of Washington or any other State, unless perhaps there is one—New Jersey—that has ever gone so far as to require domestic insurance to be taken down by all kinds of employees—nurses for a short time, or a cook, and this bill does.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington rose.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not yield. This measure, if you please, goes as far as any soap-box orator advocate does. I went almost from ocean to ocean thus in trying to elect a Republican Congress, inveighing, if you please, against this kind of propaganda, and I heard the same kind of talk preached from street corners in several of our large cities, and here is the Congress of the United States that is supposed to be protecting the best interests of the country now listening to this damnable doctrine, destructive to the peace of our country and our institutions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired; all time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. There is an amendment made in this bill with respect to the title. When the title is read it is open to the usual——

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment of the title is adopted after the bill is passed.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 261. Joint resolution for the appointment of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the prosperity of the District of Columbia depends in a large measure upon the well-being of its wageworkers, and, therefore, for workers injured in employment and their families and dependents sure and certain relief is hereby provided, regardless of questions of fault and to the exclusion of every other remedy, proceeding, or compensation, except as otherwise provided in this act; and to that end all civil actions and civil causes of action for such personal injuries and all jurisdiction of the courts of the District over such causes are hereby abolished, except as in this act provided.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph, and I wish then to move to insert H. R. 9546, and if that motion prevails I shall move to strike out the balance and substitute H. R. 9546.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential amendment, first, to the first paragraph, which would have priority over such a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. UNDERHILL: Page 1, beginning with line 3, strike out all of lines 3 to 6, inclusive, on page 1, and all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive, on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] desire to offer a preferential motion?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the words in line 6, page 2, "except as in this act provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 6, strike out the words "except as in this act provided."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as between this bill and what is known as the Underhill substitute, I am for the Underhill substitute. But this bill, as suggested inferentially by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], ought to go back to the committee for further consideration. There is shown to exist here among the membership of the committee a wide difference of opinion as to the policy carried out in this bill.

We have a compensation law in New York and in Ohio and in my State of Texas, but the Government of the United States has nothing in the world to do with those laws. They are our local laws, providing for the industrial workers of our respective States. The Government of the United States here in the District of Columbia has a compensation law for accidents to its employees. That is well and proper. I supported such a measure. I support such a measure now. I am in favor of such a law, both in the District and in the States. But I want to ask my colleagues what interest have the people in Ohio in the industrial accidents that happen here in the District of Columbia by reason of business relations that exist here only in the District of Columbia? What interest have the people of New York in this question? What interest have the people of New Jersey? It is a matter which should be decided in regard to and in relation to the business interests of the District of Columbia and only that; and whenever such a bill as that is worked out, whenever it is properly worked out, to take the Government out of private business, you will not find the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] opposing it. He is a man too broadminded to oppose such a law if properly drawn. He would have no opposition to it.

I am with the gentleman from Indiana. I also have been from one side of the United States to the other preaching against the doctrine of bringing the Government into private business in every line. It ought to stop. Here is the place to stop it. It ought to be stopped here. You should send this bill back to the committee. We have either got to vote for this bill or the substitute.

Let me show you what kind of a situation we are in if we adopt the amendment that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] is going to offer in a minute, to accept this bill in lieu of the first paragraph of the present Fitzgerald bill. What chance will you have to amend a single provision of the Underhill bill? Not one. You can not offer an amendment to the Underhill bill, and if you adopt that one amendment you have accepted his entire bill as a substitute, and you are swallowing it when you do not know what it contains. There are a lot of provisions in there that ought to be changed by amendment, and which should have the consideration of the House. It should be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, regarding the last statement of the gentleman, if that is so——

Mr. BLANTON. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. UNDERHILL. But if it is so, I will ask unanimous consent that amendments may be received to the Underhill bill. The only reason I offer the bill as a substitute to the Fitzgerald bill is that with all due modesty, the bill is better drawn. You can not amend the Fitzgerald bill without taking every paragraph and turning it inside out. The Underhill bill is a combination of the New York, Maryland, and Virginia laws, and as a great many people in the District of Columbia do business in Maryland and Virginia, the law should in some respects agree with the law in those two States, and the bill has been drawn paragraph after paragraph in every instance from the existing law of some State.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] made a wrong statement when he said that his State has such a bill. His State has not such a bill.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I did not mean an identical bill. I said in broad terms that we had a compensation bill framed on the same plan as this.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is very true. That is what I am trying to present to this House. We do not oppose workingmen's compensation. If we had a chance, I would almost be in favor even of invading State rights as they are held to exist in some of the States of the Union and establish compensation insurance in all States. That is a different proposition. But when a gentleman here, like the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], whose State has not got it, misapprehends my statement and says we are trying to impose it on the District of Columbia, what right has he to criticize?

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. I was only amused by the gentleman's proposition that he would usurp the rights of the States, and thereby violate his constitutional oath.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, I exaggerated my statement. I am a defender of State rights. But I had reference more particularly to the situation when the gentleman was amused by the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that this was a socialistic matter, and that when they tried to impose it on his State without his consent he would agree that it is a socialistic measure and would vote against it right here to-day.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. MacGREGOR. In reference to the statement of my colleague from New York [Mr. KINDRED], I hold in my hand the workingmen's compensation law of New York. The statement was made by our friend from Brooklyn that it covered domestic service. The New York law expressly exempts farm labor and domestic service.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I know that, but it is hard to make the Members of the House understand that one proposition. This bill in no way, shape, or manner prevents workmen's compensation, which is a proper thing, but it does prevent the Government going into that line of business.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, with reference to what the gentleman from Texas said, of course it would be in order to offer amendments to the proposed substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair will make a statement about that. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] desire the floor?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the pro forma amendment.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to that motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The gentleman from Texas offered a preferential motion, which was only for parliamentary purposes. The gentleman from Massachusetts was heard upon it, and that motion was subsequently withdrawn. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman now.

Mr. LONDON. I do not understand that.

Mr. BLANTON. If the first paragraph of a pending bill is read in the committee and another bill is offered as an amendment by way of substitute to that paragraph, is it not in order to offer amendments to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It certainly is.

Mr. BLANTON. The substitute is not read paragraph by paragraph in the way the bill is.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending its adoption, amendments may be offered to any part of it.

Mr. BLANTON. But the substitute is not read by paragraphs as an appropriation bill is.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true, but that does not prevent amendments being offered to any part of it.

Mr. HILL. If it is offered as one amendment, the whole bill will have to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make a statement about that. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] offered a motion to strike out and insert. However, there was no insertion accompanying his motion, and it was treated only as a motion to strike out. That does not make any difference, however, because the offer was properly made. The Chair will treat his motion as having been made in the way the gentleman in fact did make it, as a motion to strike out and insert, with notice that if the motion to strike out and insert is agreed to there will be action taken with regard to the other sections of the original bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a question of order. May I be heard on the practice that has grown up only in this Congress as to striking out the first paragraph of a bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that the Chair is making a statement in regard to that very thing.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought perhaps the Chair would allow me to make some observations on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the Chair will in a moment. During the consideration of that amendment, when it is offered, an amendment to any section of the substitute may be considered and disposed of by the committee. Of course, the Clerk will read the entire offered substitute, so that it will not be read section by section unless that is desired; but at any time any Member may offer any amendment to any section of the substitute after it has been reported. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to make any observation?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am quite well aware that the present presiding officer has ruled, and there have been other presiding officers in this Congress who have ruled, that when a bill consisting of many sections is under consideration and the first section is read it is in order to entertain a motion to strike out the first section and substitute an entirely different bill. I have not examined the precedents recently, but I did some time ago before it was the established practice to permit that to be done. I do not believe the earlier precedents will uphold that practice. I believe that all the precedents before the present Congress required that the bill offered as a substitute must be a real substitute for the first section which is moved to be stricken out. It is not fair to the Committee of the Whole or to the committee reporting the bill to have a bill consisting of many sections, like this bill, treated in this way, and as soon as the first section is read to have a motion made to strike out the first section and to substitute another bill which in fact is not a substitute for that first section. No one can pretend for one moment, in parliamentary argument on this question, that the Underhill bill, consisting of 48 pages and many diverse sections, is a substitute for the first paragraph of the bill under consideration. The bill under consideration should be considered section by section, so that the committee will have an opportunity to amend it.

I can conceive of a case where, after the reading of the first section of the bill, a motion to strike out that first section and substitute a real substitute for it, with notice given that the succeeding sections when read will be met with a motion to strike them out, would be in order; but I respectfully maintain, Mr. Chairman, that for a substitute bill to be in order as soon as the first section is read it must be a real substitute for the matter stricken out, and in this case it is not such a substitute. If the Chair will permit me a moment further, I am quite sure that the rulings and precedents prior to this Congress do not bear out the present holdings of the Chair. I am not disputing the fact that there are decisions in this Congress which hold counter to that, but I am sure that the prior decisions hold differently.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair may think so——

The CHAIRMAN. The present rule has been adopted for at least 10 or 12 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair may say that, but I respectfully contend that the precedents are not that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. UNDERHILL moves to strike out all of page 1, beginning with line 3, down to and including line 6 on page 2, and insert:

"That this act shall be known as 'The District of Columbia workmen's compensation act.'

"SEC. 2. That the office of compensation commissioner for the District of Columbia is hereby created. It shall be the duty of such commissioner to administer this act. He shall be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and shall be an actual resident of said District. His term of office shall be for four years, but said commissioners may at any time remove him for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. The salary of such commissioner shall be $4,500 per annum, and shall be paid as other salaries and expenses of public officers of the District of Columbia are paid. The commissioner shall devote his entire time to the duties of the office and shall not hold any position of trust or engage in any occupation or business interfering or inconsistent with his duties as such commissioner. The commissioner shall maintain an office in the District of Columbia, to be provided by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 3. That any investigation, inquiry, or hearing which the compensation commissioner is authorized to hold or undertake may be held or undertaken by or before any deputy commissioner, and every order made by a deputy commissioner, when approved and confirmed by the compensation commissioner and so shown on his record of proceedings, shall be deemed to be the order of the compensation commissioner.

"SEC. 4. That the office of the compensation commissioner shall be open for the transaction of business during all business hours of each and every day, excepting Sunday and legal holidays. All hearings shall be open to the public and shall stand and be adjourned without further notice thereof on its record. All proceedings of the commissioner shall be shown on his record of proceedings, which shall be a public record, and shall contain a record of each case considered and the award made and of all remuneration paid or allowed to any employee of the commissioner or to any other person for services: Provided, however, That any person in the employ of the commissioner who shall divulge any information secured by him in respect to the transactions, property, or business of any person, firm, company or corporation, association or joint partnership to any person other than the compensation commissioner or a deputy commissioner shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not less than $100 or more than $500, or imprisonment not exceeding 12 months, in the discretion of the court, and shall thereafter be disqualified from holding any appointment with the commissioner.

"SEC. 5. That the compensation commissioner may employ a deputy or deputies, clerks, stenographers, and other assistants, and fix their compensation, subject to the written approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The commissioner shall provide necessary office furniture and supplies for the same. Such compensation and all necessary expenses shall be audited and paid as other salaries and expenses of the District of Columbia are paid. The commissioner shall provide himself with a seal for the authentication of his orders, awards, and proceedings, upon which shall be inscribed the words 'District of Columbia Compensation Commissioner—Official Seal.'

"The compensation commissioner and each deputy commissioner shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe to the constitutional oath of office.

"SEC. 6. That the compensation commissioner and each deputy commissioner shall, for purposes contemplated by this act, have power to issue subpœnas, compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, certify to official acts, compel the production of pertinent books, pay rolls, accounts, papers, records, documents, and testimony.

"If a person subpœnaed to attend or in attendance before the compensation commissioner or a deputy commissioner shall, without reasonable cause, fail or refuse to attend or refuse to be examined or to answer a legal and pertinent question, or to produce a book or paper when ordered to do so by the commissioner or deputy commissioner, the commissioner may apply to any judge of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, upon proof by affidavit of the fact, for a rule or order returnable in not less than two or more than five days, directing such person to show cause before the judge who made the order, or any other judge aforesaid, why he should not be committed to jail; upon the return of such order the judge before whom the matter and such person shall come on for a hearing shall examine under oath such person, and such person shall be given an opportunity to be heard; and if the judge shall determine that such person has failed or refused, without reasonable cause or legal excuse, to attend or to be examined or to answer a legal or pertinent question, or to produce a book or paper which he was ordered to bring or produce, he may forthwith commit the offender to jail, there to remain until he submits to do the act which he was so required to do or is discharged according to law.

"SEC. 7. That each officer or person who serves a subpœna issued as aforesaid shall receive the same fee as the marshal would receive where said witness is subpœnaed, and each witness who appears in obedience to a subpœna before the compensation commissioner or a deputy commissioner shall receive for his attendance the fees and mileage provided for witnesses in civil cases in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, which shall be audited and paid in the same manner as other expenses hereinbefore provided for. No witness subpœnaed at the instance of a party other than the compensation commissioner or deputy commissioner shall be entitled to compensation, unless the commissioner or deputy shall certify that his testimony was material to the matter investigated. In an investigation the commissioner may cause depositions of witnesses residing within or without the District to be taken in the manner prescribed by law for like depositions taken in cases pending before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The compensation commissioner shall have authority to appoint, by his written order, any subordinate or other person to serve subpœnas, notices, and all other papers issued by and in his name.

"SEC. 8. That, subject to the provisions of this act, the compensation commissioner shall adopt reasonable and proper rules to govern his procedure, which procedure shall be as summary and simple as reasonably may be. He shall regulate and provide for the kind and character of notices and the service thereof, and, in cases of injury by accident to employees, the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence and the method of taking and furnishing the same for the establishment of the right to compensation. He shall determine the nature and forms of application of those claiming to be entitled to benefits or compensation, and shall regulate the method of making investigations, physical examinations, and inspections, and prescribe the time within which adjudications and awards shall be made: Provided, That all such rules and regulations shall conform to the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 9. That a transcribed copy of the evidence and proceedings, or any specific part thereof, of any investigation taken by a stenographer appointed by the compensation commissioner or a deputy commissioner, being certified and sworn to by such stenographer to be a true and correct transcript of the testimony, or of a particular witness, or of any specific part thereof, or to be a correct transcript of the proceedings had on such investigation so purporting to be taken and subscribed, may be received in evidence by the commissioner or a deputy with the same effect as if such stenographer were present and testified to the facts certified. A copy of such transcript shall be furnished on demand to any party in interest upon payment of the fee therefor, as provided by rule of the compensation commissioner.

"SEC. 10. (a) That the compensation commissioner shall prepare and furnish free of cost blank forms and provide for their distribution, so that the same may be readily available, of applications for benefits or compensation, notices to employers, proof of injury or death, of medical attendance, of employment and wage earnings, and such other blanks as may be deemed proper and advisable, and it shall be the duty of employers to constantly keep on hand a sufficient supply of such blanks.

"(b) The compensation commissioner shall inquire into the causes and results of accidents to employees, and study the methods of safeguarding against such accidents. The said commissioner, or any of his agents, may enter into any place of employment for the purpose of collecting facts and statistics, examining the provisions made for the health, protection, and safety of employees and observing and enforcing the observance of any law, ordinance, or other lawful rule, regulations, or order relating thereto.

"SEC. 11. That annually, on or before the 1st day of January, the compensation commissioner shall make a report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which shall include a statement of the number of awards made by him, the causes of the accidents leading to the injuries for which the awards were made, and a detailed statement of the expenses of his office, together with any other matters which the commissioner deems proper to report, including any recommendations he may desire to make.

"SEC. 12. That if an employee suffers personal injury or death by accident arising out of and in the course of an employment subject to this act his employer or insurer shall pay or provide compensation according to the schedules of this act, except where the injury is occasioned by the willful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or where the injury results solely from the intoxication of the injured employee while on duty. Where the injury is occasioned by the willful intention of the injured employee to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or where the injury results solely from the intoxication of the injured employee while on duty, neither the injured employee nor any dependent of such employee shall receive compensation under this act.

"The liability prescribed by the last preceding paragraph shall be exclusive, except that if an employer fail to secure the payment of compensation for his injured employees and their dependents, as provided in this act, an injured employee or his legal representative, in case death results from the injury, may, at his option, elect either to claim compensation under this act or to maintain an action in the courts for damages on account of such injury; and in such an action the defendant may not plead as a defense that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant or that the employee assumed the risk of his employment, or that the injury was due to the contributory negligence of the employee.

"SEC. 13. That this act shall apply to all private employments, except as herein otherwise provided. It shall not apply to—

"(1) Any employment in commerce between the District of Columbia and any of the States, Territories, or possessions of the United States or any foreign nation or nations, in the service of a common carrier by railroad;

"(2) Any employment that is casual and not in the usual course of the trade, business, occupation, or profession of the employer;

"(3) Any employment in an occupation not carried on by the employer for the sake of pecuniary gain;

"(4) Any employment as a household domestic servant; or

"(5) Any employment by an eleemosynary institution or association.

"Provided, however, That an excluded employment may be brought under the provisions of this act by express agreement in writing between the employer and employee filed with the compensation commissioner.

"SEC. 14. (a) That where an accident happens while the employee is employed elsewhere than in the District of Columbia which would entitle him or his dependents to compensation if it had happened in such District, the employee or his dependents shall be entitled to compensation, if the contract of employment was made in said District, if the employer's place of business is in said District, or if the residence of the employee is in said District: Provided, That his contract of employment was not expressly for service exclusively outside of said District.

"(b) Provided, however, That if an employee shall receive compensation or damages under the law of any State or Territory other than the District of Columbia, nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to permit a total compensation for the same injury greater than is provided in this act.

"SEC. 15. That the rights and remedies herein granted shall exclude all other rights and remedies of such employee, his personal representative, wife, parents, dependents, or next of kin, at common law or otherwise on account of such injury, loss of service, or death, except as herein elsewhere otherwise provided.

"The making of a lawful claim against an employer for compensation under this act for the injury or death of an employee shall operate as an assignment to the employer of any right to recover damages which the injured employee or his personal representative or other person may have against any other party for such injury or death, and such employer shall be subrogated to any such right and may enforce, in his own name or in the name of the injured employee or his personal representative, the legal liability of such other party. The amount of compensation paid by the employer or the amount of compensation to which the injured employee or his dependents are entitled shall not be admissible as evidence in any action brought to recover damages, but any amount collected by the employer under the provisions of this section in excess of the amount of compensation paid by the employer subject to the order of the compensation commissioner or for which he is liable shall be held by the employer for the benefit of the injured employee or other person entitled thereto, less such amounts as are paid by the employer for reasonable expenses and attorney's fees: Provided, That no compromise settlement shall be made by the employer or insurance carrier in the exercise of such right of subrogation without the approval of the compensation commissioner and the injured employee or the personal representative or dependents of the deceased employee being first had and obtained.

"Where any employer is insured against liability for compensation with any insurance carrier, and such insurance carrier shall have paid any compensation for which the employer is liable or shall have assumed the liability of the employer therefor, it shall be subrogated to all the rights and duties of the employer, and may enforce any such rights in its own name or in the name of the injured employee or his or her personal representative: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed as conferring upon insurance carriers any other or further rights than those existing in the employer at the time of the injury to his employee, anything in the policy of insurance to the contrary notwithstanding.

"An employer, insurance carrier, firm, association, or corporation knowingly misappropriating any moneys collected, received, or held under the foregoing provisions of this section shall be guilty of a felony and punished by imprisonment for not exceeding five years or by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by both.

"SEC. 16. (a) That where any person (in this section referred to as principal contractor) undertakes to execute any work, which is a part of his trade, business, or occupation or which he has contracted to perform, and contracts with any other person (in this section referred to as subcontractor) for the execution by or under the subcontractor of the whole or any part of the work undertaken by such principal contractor, the principal contractor shall be liable to pay to any employee employed in the work any compensation under this act which he would have been liable to pay if the employee had been immediately employed by him; and where compensation is claimed from or proceedings are taken against the principal contractor, then, in the application of this act, reference to the principal contractor shall be substituted for reference to the subcontractor, except that the amount of compensation shall be calculated with reference to the earnings of the employee under the subcontractor by whom he is immediately employed.

"(b) Where the principal contractor is liable to pay compensation under this section, he shall be entitled to indemnity from any person who would have been liable to pay compensation to the employee independently of this section or from any intermediate contractor, and shall have a cause of action therefor.

"(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing an employee from recovering compensation under this act from a subcontractor instead of from the principal contractor, but he shall not collect from both.

"(d) A principal contractor, when sued by an employee of a subcontractor, shall have the right to call in that subcontractor or any intermediate contractor or contractors as defendant or codefendant.

"SEC. 17. (a) That no employer or employee who is subject to the provisions of this act shall exempt himself from the burden or waive the benefit of this act by any contract, agreement, rule, or regulation, and any such contract, agreement, rule, or regulation shall be pro tanto void. No agreement by such employee to pay any portion of the insurance premium paid by such employer shall be valid, and any employer who deducts any portion of such premium from the wages or salary of any employee entitled to the benefits of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $200 for each offense.

"(b) Nothing herein shall affect any existing contract or policy of employer's liability insurance or the liability of any mutual insurance association, or any arrangement now existing between employers and employees, providing for the payment to such employees, their families, dependents, or representatives of sick, accident, or death benefits in addition to the compensation provided for by this act; but liability for the compensation specified in this act shall not be reduced or affected by any insurance, contribution, or other benefit whatsoever due to or received by the person entitled to such compensation, and the person so entitled, irrespective of any such insurance or other contract shall have the right to recover the compensation directly from the employer.

"SEC. 18. That no claim for compensation under this act shall be assignable, and all compensation and claims therefor shall be exempt from all claims of creditors.

"SEC. 19. That all rights of compensation granted by this act shall have the same preference or priority for the whole thereof against the assets of the employer as is allowed by law for any unpaid wages for labor.

"SEC. 20. That in addition to the compensation hereinafter provided for the employer shall promptly provide for an injured employee such medical, surgical, or other attendance or treatment, nurse and hospital services, medicines, crutches, apparatus, artificial hands, arms, feet, and legs as may be required by the compensation commissioner in an amount not to exceed $300. If an employer neglects to provide the same, the injured employee may do so at the expense of the employer. All fees and other charges for such treatment and services shall be subject to regulation by the compensation commissioner and shall be limited to such charges as prevail in the same community for similar treatment of injured persons of a like standard of living. In case death ensues from the injury within three years, reasonable funeral expenses shall also be allowed, not to exceed the sum of $150. The compensation commissioner shall have full power to adopt rules and regulations with respect to furnishing medical, nurse, and hospital services and medicine to injured employees entitled thereto and for the payment therefor.

"SEC. 21. That no compensation shall be allowed for the first ——— calendar days of disability resulting from an injury, except the benefits provided in section 20; but if disability extends beyond that period, compensation shall commence with the eighth day of disability. If, however, such disability shall continue for more than four weeks, then compensation shall be payable for the first ——— days of disability.

"SEC. 22. That each employee (or in case of death his dependents entitled to receive compensation under this act) shall receive the same in accordance with the following schedule, and except as in this act otherwise provided such payment shall be in lieu of any and all rights of action whatsoever against any person whomsoever.

"1. Permanent total disability: In case of total disability adjudged to be permanent, 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wages shall be paid to the employee during the continuance of such total disability, not to exceed a maximum of $25 per week and not less than a minimum of $7 per week, unless the employee's established weekly wages are less than $7 per week at the time of the injury, in which event he shall receive compensation in an amount equal to his average weekly wages, but not to exceed a total of $5,000. Loss or loss of use of both hands or both arms or both feet or both legs or both eyes, or of any two thereof, shall, in the absence of conclusive proof to the contrary, constitute permanent total disability. In all other cases permanent total disability shall be determined in accordance with the facts.

"2. Temporary total disability: In case of temporary total disability, 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wages shall be paid to the employee during the continuance thereof, but not to exceed a maximum of $25 per week and not less than a minimum of $7 per week, unless the employee's established weekly wages are less than $7 per week at the time of the injury, in which event he shall receive compensation equal to his full wages; but in no case to continue more than six years from the date of the injury or to exceed $3,750 in the aggregate.

"3. Permanent partial disability: In case of disability partial in character but permanent in quality the compensation shall be 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wages, in no case to exceed $25 per week and not less than a minimum of $7 per week, unless the employee's established weekly wages are less than $7 per week at the time of the injury, in which event he shall receive compensation equal to his full wages, but in no case to exceed $3,750 in the aggregate, and shall be paid to the employee for the period named in the schedule as follows:

"Thumb: For the loss of a thumb, 50 weeks.

"First finger: For the loss of a first finger, commonly called the index finger, 30 weeks.

"Second finger: For the loss of a second finger, 25 weeks.

"Third finger: For the loss of a third finger, 20 weeks.

"Fourth finger: For the loss of a fourth finger, commonly called the little finger, 15 weeks.

"The loss of the second, or distal, phalange of the thumb shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-half of such thumb; the loss of more than one-half of such thumb shall be considered to be equal to the loss of the whole thumb; the loss of the third, or distal, phalange of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of one-third of such finger. The loss of the middle, or second, phalange of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of two-thirds of such finger. The loss of more than the middle and distal phalange of any finger shall be considered to be equal to the loss of the whole of such finger: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount received for more than one finger exceed the amount provided in this schedule for the loss of a hand.

"Great toe: For the loss of a great toe, 25 weeks.

"Other toes: For the loss of one of the toes, other than the great toe, 10 weeks.

"Hand: For the loss of a hand, 150 weeks.

"Arm: For the loss of an arm, 200 weeks.

"Foot: For the loss of a foot, 150 weeks.

"Leg: For the loss of a leg, 175 weeks.

"Eye: For the loss of an eye, 100 weeks.

"Hearing: For the total loss of hearing of one ear, 50 weeks; for the total loss of hearing of both ears, 100 weeks.

"Loss of use: Permanent loss of use of a hand, arm, foot, leg, or eye shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of such hand, arm, foot, leg, or eye, and for the loss of the fractional part of the vision of either one or both eyes the injured employee shall be compensated in like proportion to the compensation for total loss of vision, and in arriving at the fractional part of vision lost regard shall not be had for the effect that correcting lens or lenses may have upon the eye or eyes.

"Amputations: Amputation between the elbow and the wrist shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a hand. Amputation between the knee and the ankle shall be considered as the equivalent of the loss of a foot. Amputation at or above the elbow shall be considered as the loss of an arm. Amputation at or above the knee shall be considered as the loss of the leg.

"The compensation for the foregoing specific injuries shall be paid in addition to, and consecutively with, the compensation hereinbefore provided in subsection 2 of this section.

"If an employee dies, the right to any compensation payable under this subsection unpaid at the date of his death shall survive to and vest in his personal representatives.

"Other cases: In all other cases in this class of disability the compensation shall be 50 per cent of the difference between his average weekly wages and his wage-earning capacity thereafter in the same employment or otherwise, if less than before the accident—but not to exceed $25 per week—payable during the continuance of such partial disability, but not to exceed $3,000, and subject to reconsideration of the degree of such impairment by the compensation commissioner on his own motion or upon application of any party in interest.

"In all cases where there has been an amputation of a part of any member of the body herein specified, or the loss of the use of any part thereof, for which compensation is not specifically provided herein, the commissioner shall allow compensation for such proportion of the total number of weeks allowed for the amputation or the loss of the use of the entire member as the affected or amputated portion thereof bears to the whole.

"Disfigurements: For other mutilations and disfigurements, not hereinbefore provided for, compensation shall be allowed, in the discretion of the commissioner, for not less than 10 weeks nor more than 100 weeks, as the commissioner may fix, in each case having due regard to the character of the mutilation and disfigurement as compared with mutilation and injury hereinbefore specifically provided for.

"4. Temporary partial disability: In case of temporary partial disability, except the particular cases mentioned in subdivision 3 of this section, an injured employee shall receive 50 per cent of the difference between his average weekly wages and his wage-earning capacity thereafter in the same employment or otherwise, if less than before the accident, but not to exceed $25 per week during the continuance of such partial disability, but not in excess of $3,500, except as otherwise provided in this article.

"5. Fatal cases: In case the injury causes death within the period of three years, the benefits shall be in the amounts and to the persons following:

"If there be no dependents, the disbursements shall be limited to the expense provided for in section 20 hereof.

"If there are wholly dependent persons at the time of death, the payment shall be 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wages, not to exceed, however, a maximum of $25 per week and not less than a minimum of $7 per week, unless the deceased employee's established weekly wages were less than $7 per week at the time of injury, in which event the compensation shall be an amount equal to the average weekly wages, and to continue for the remainder of the period between the date of death and 416 weeks after the date of injury, and not to amount to more than a maximum of $5,000, nor less than a minimum of $1,000.

"If there are no wholly dependent persons at the time of the death, but are partly dependent persons, those partly dependent shall receive compensation as follows: The weekly payments to such dependents shall be in an amount not exceeding 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wages or $25 per week, but may in the discretion of the commissioner be for a less amount per week and to continue for all or such portion of 416 weeks after the date of the injury, as the commissioner in each case may determine, and not to amount to more than a maximum of $3,000.

"The following persons shall be presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: A wife or invalid husband ('invalid' meaning one physically or mentally incapacitated from earning), a child or children under the age of 16 years (or over said age if physically or mentally incapacitated from earning) living with or dependent upon the parent at the time of the injury or death. But a husband or wife of an injured employee who has deserted said employee for more than one year prior to the time of the injury or subsequently shall not be a beneficiary under this act.

"In all other cases questions of dependency, in whole or in part, shall be determined in accordance with the facts in each particular case existing at the time of the injury resulting in death of such employee, but no person shall be considered as dependent unless such person be a father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, stepchild, or grandchild, or brother or sister of the deceased employee, including those otherwise specified in this section.

"The term 'child' and 'children' shall include posthumous children and adopted children, whether members of the deceased employee's household at the time of his accident or death or not, and shall also include stepchildren, illegitimate children, and other children, if such stepchildren, illegitimate children, and other children were members of the household of the decedent at the time of the accident or death and had received contributions toward their support from such deceased employee during any part of the six months immediately preceding the accident or death.

"The right to any compensation payable to any dependent and unpaid at the date of death of any such dependent shall survive to and be vested in the surviving dependents, as the commissioner may determine, if there be such surviving dependents, and if there be none such, then the compensation shall cease.

"Compensation under this article to alien dependent widows, children, and parents, not residents of the United States, shall be the same in amount as is provided in each case for residents, except that at any time within one year after an accident resulting in death the commissioner may, in his discretion, convert any payments thereafter to become due to such beneficiaries into a lump-sum payment, not in any case to exceed $2,400, by paying a sum equal to three-fourths of the then value of such payments.

"Nonresident alien dependents may be officially represented by the consular officers of the nation of which such alien or aliens may be citizens or subjects, and in such cases the consular officers shall have the right to receive for distribution to such nonresident alien dependents all compensation awarded hereunder, and the receipt of such consular officers shall be a full discharge of all sums paid to and received by them.

"In case of the remarriage of a dependent widow of a deceased employee, without dependent children at the time of the remarriage, she shall receive compensation for one year after the date of her remarriage, provided there is so much of the compensation previously awarded her outstanding. No widow or widower shall receive any benefits under this act where the marriage shall have taken place after the person entitled to benefits hereunder shall have been injured, provided there are no dependent children.

"6. Where an injury to an employee is caused by the intentional failure of the employer to comply with any statute or lawful public ordinance, rule, regulation, or order relating to the safety of employees, the compensation for which the employer would otherwise be liable under this act shall be increased 15 per cent in the amount of each payment. Where the injury is caused by the intentional failure of the injured employee to use any safety appliance furnished by the employer or to obey any lawful public ordinance, rule, regulation, or order relating to the safety of employees, the compensation for which the employer would otherwise be liable for under this act shall be decreased 15 per cent in the amount of each payment.

"SEC. 23. That the benefits in case of death shall be paid to such one or more of the dependents of the decedent for the benefit of all the dependents as may be determined by the compensation commissioner, who may apportion the benefits among the dependents in such manner as he may deem just and equitable. The dependent or person to whom benefits are paid shall apply the same to the use of the several dependents according to their respective claims upon the decedent for support, in compliance with the finding and direction of the commissioner.

"SEC. 24. That the fact that an employee has suffered previous disability or received compensation therefor shall not preclude him from compensation for a later injury nor preclude compensation for death resulting therefrom; but in determining compensation for the later injury or death his average weekly wages shall be such sum as will reasonably represent his earning capacity at the time of the later injury: Provided, That an employee who is suffering from a previous disability shall not receive compensation for a later injury in excess of the compensation allowed for such injury when considered by itself and not in conjunction with the previous disability: Provided further, That if an employee who has previously incurred permanent partial disability through the loss of one hand, one arm, one foot, one leg, or one eye incurs permanent total disability through the loss of another such member or organ, he shall be paid, in addition to the compensation for permanent partial disability provided in this section and after the cessation of the payments for the prescribed period of weeks, special additional compensation for the remainder of his life to the amount of 66⅔ per cent of the average weekly wage earned by him at the time the total permanent disability was incurred. Such additional compensation shall be paid out of a special fund created for such purpose in the following manner: The employer or insurance carrier shall pay to the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia for every case of injury causing death in which there are no persons entitled to compensation the sum of $100. The superintendent of insurance shall be the custodian of this special fund and the compensation commissioner shall direct the distribution thereof.

"SEC. 25. That the compensation in this act provided for shall be payable weekly; but the compensation commissioner, upon application of either party, may, in his discretion, having regard to the welfare of the employee and the convenience of the employer or insurer, authorize compensation to be paid monthly or quarterly instead of weekly.

"SEC. 26. That whenever any periodical payment has been continued for not less than 26 weeks, the liability therefor may, in unusual cases, where the parties agree and the compensation commissioner deems it to be to the best interests of the employee or his dependents, or where it will prevent undue hardships on the employer or his insurance carrier, without prejudicing the interests of the employee or his dependents, be redeemed, in whole or in part, by the payment by the employer or insurance carrier of a lump sum which shall be fixed by the commissioner, but in no case to exceed the commutable value of the future installments which may be due under this act. The commissioner, however, in his discretion, may at any time in the case of a minor who has received permanently disabling injuries, either partial or total, provide that he be compensated in whole or in part by the payment of a lump sum, the amount of which shall be fixed by the commissioner, but in no case to exceed the commutable value of the future installments which may be due under this act.

"SEC. 27. That whenever the compensation commissioner deems it expedient any lump sum, subject to the provision of the foregoing section, shall be paid by the employer or insurance carrier to some suitable person or corporation appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as trustee, to administer the same for the benefit of the person entitled thereto in the manner ordered by the commissioner. The receipt of such trustee for the amount so paid shall discharge the employer or anyone else who is liable therefor.

"SEC. 28. That if a dependent shall reside or remove out of the United States and shall have been such nonresident for a period of one year the commissioner may, in his discretion, convert any payments thereafter to become due to such dependent into a lump-sum payment, not in any case to exceed $2,400, by paying a sum equal to three-fourths of the then value of such payments.

"SEC. 29. (a) That whenever payment of compensation is made to a widow or widower for her or his use, or for her or his use and the use of the child or children, the written receipt thereof of such widow or widower shall acquit the employer.

"(b) Whenever payment is made to any person 18 years of age or over the written receipt of such person shall acquit the employer. In case where an infant or minor under the age of 18 years shall be entitled to receive a sum amounting to not more than $300 as compensation for injuries, or as a distributive share by virtue of this act, the father, mother, or natural guardian upon whom such infant or minor shall be dependent for support shall be authorized and empowered to receive and receipt for such moneys to the same extent as a guardian of the person and property of such infant or minor duly appointed by proper court, and the release or discharge of such father, mother, or natural guardian shall be full and complete discharge of all claims or demands of such infant or minor thereunder.

"(c) Whenever any payment of over $300 is made to a minor under 18 years of age, or to a dependent child over the age of 18 years, the same shall be made to some suitable person or corporation appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as a trustee, and the receipt of such trustee shall acquit the employer.

"(d) Payment of death benefits by an employer in good faith to a dependent subsequent in right to another or other dependents shall protect and discharge the employer, unless and until such dependent or dependents prior in right shall have given him notice of his or their claim. In case the employer is in doubt as to the respective rights of rival claimants he may apply to the compensation commissioner to decide between them.

"SEC. 30. That if an injured employee is mentally incompetent or is under 18 years of age at the time when any right or privilege accrues to him under this act, his guardian, trustee, or committee may in his behalf claim and exercise such right or privilege. And no limitation of time provided in this act for the giving of notice or making claim under this act shall run against any person who is mentally incompetent, or a minor dependent, so long as he has no guardian, trustee, or committee.

"SEC. 31. That a minor working at any age legally permitted under the laws of the District of Columbia shall be deemed sui juris for the purposes of this act, and no other person shall have any cause of action or right to compensation for any injury to such minor employee unless otherwise herein provided.

"SEC. 32. That the employer shall secure compensation to his employees in one of the following ways:

"(1) by insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation with any stock or mutual corporation authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in the District of Columbia.

"(2) By furnishing satisfactory proof to the compensation commissioner of his financial ability to pay such compensation himself, in which case the commissioner may, at any time and from time to time, in his discretion, require the deposit with the commissioner of securities such as are accepted by the equity courts of the District of Columbia for the investment of trust funds, and in an amount or amounts to be determined by the commissioner, to insure the liability of the employer to pay the compensation specified in this act; and in order to be informed as to the continued financial responsibility of any such employer the commissioner may require reports from him annually, or at any such other times as the commissioner may deem necessary or advisable, and may examine such employer under oath or make such other examination of his business as the commissioner may determine. If he should fail to furnish such satisfactory proof, or give bond, or deposit such securities, as required by the commissioner, or if he should at any time fail to render satisfactory reports to the commissioner or otherwise satisfy the commissioner of his continued financial ability to pay the compensation himself, he shall be subject to the provisions of the first paragraph of this section.

"SEC. 33. (a) That every employer subject to the provisions of this act shall, within 30 days after this act takes effect, file with the compensation commissioner, in form prescribed by him, and thereafter annually or as often as may be necessary, evidence of his compliance with the provisions of section 32 and all others relating thereto. If any such employer refuses or neglects to comply with the provisions of this paragraph he shall be punished by a fine of 10 cents for each employee at the time of the insurance becoming due, but not less than $1 nor more than $50 for each day of such refusal or neglect, and until the same ceases, and he shall be liable during continuance of such refusal or neglect to an employee either for compensation under this act or at law, in the same manner as if he were not subject to this act, except that in such action at law he shall not be permitted to defend upon any or all of the following grounds: (1) That the employee was negligent; (2) that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow employee; (3) that the employee had assumed the risk of injury.

"(b) Every employer who has complied with the provisions of section 32 shall post and maintain in a conspicuous place in and about each of his places of business or other places where his employees subject to this act are employed a typewritten or printed notice in such form as the compensation commissioner may prescribe, stating the facts of compliance with such provisions and giving the name and address of his insurer, if he be insured. If any employer neglects or refuses to comply with the provisions of this paragraph he shall be liable to a penalty of 10 cents per day for each employee affected, but not less than $1 in any event: Provided, however, That the compensation commissioner, for good cause shown, may remit such penalty in whole or in part.

"SEC. 34. That whenever an employer has complied with the provisions of section 32, relating to self-insurance, the compensation commissioner shall issue to such employer a certificate which shall remain in force for a period fixed by the commissioner, but the commissioner may upon at least 30 days' notice and hearing to the employer revoke the certificate upon satisfactory evidence for such revocation having been presented. At any time after such revocation the commissioner may grant a new certificate to the employer upon his petition.

"SEC. 35. (a) That all policies or contracts insuring the payment of compensation under this act must contain a clause to the effect that as between the employer and the insurer notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the insured employer shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the insurer; that jurisdiction of the insured for the purposes of this act shall be jurisdiction of the insurer; and that the insurer shall in all things be bound by and subject to the awards, judgments, or decrees rendered against such insured employer.

"(b) No policy or contract of insurance against liability arising under this act shall be issued unless it contains the agreement of the insurer that it will promptly pay to the person entitled to same all benefits conferred by this act, and all installments of the compensation that may be awarded or agreed upon, and that the obligation shall not be affected by any default of the insured after the injury or by any default in giving notice required by such policy, or otherwise. Such agreement shall be construed to be a direct promise by the insurer to the person entitled to compensation enforceable in his name.

"(c) Every policy or contract for the insurance of the compensation herein provided, or against liability therefor, shall be deemed to be made subject to the provisions of this act. No corporation, association, or organization shall enter into any such policy of insurance unless its form shall have been approved by the superintendent of insurance.

"(d) This act shall not apply to policies of insurance against loss from explosion of boilers or flywheels or other similar single catastrophe hazards.

"SEC. 36. That no policy or contract of insurance against liability arising under this act shall be canceled within the time limited in such policy or contract for its expiration until at least 10 days after notice of intention to cancel such policy or contract, on a date specified in such notice, shall be filed in the office of the compensation commissioner and also served on the employer. Such notice shall be served on the employer by delivering it to him or by sending it by mail, by registered letter, addressed to the employer at his or its last known place of residence: Provided, That if the employer be a partnership, then such notice may be so given to any one of the partners, and if the employer be a corporation, then the notice may be given to any agent or officer of the corporation upon whom legal process may be served.

"SEC. 37. (a) That the rates charged by all carriers of insurance writing insurance against the liability for compensation under this act shall be fair, reasonable, and adequate, and all risks of the same kind and degree of hazard shall be written at the same rate by the same carrier, subject to such rules as the superintendent of insurance may prescribe. The basic rates may be modified in accordance with a plan of merit or schedule rating. No policy of insurance against liability for compensation under this act shall be valid until the rate thereof has been approved by the superintendent of insurance, nor shall any such carrier of insurance write any such policy or contract until its basic and merit rating schedules have been filed with, approved, and not subsequently disapproved by the superintendent of insurance.

"(b) Each such insurance carrier shall report to the superintendent of insurance, in accordance with such reasonable rules as the superintendent of insurance may at any time prescribe, for the purpose of determining the solvency of the carrier and the adequacy of its rates; for such purpose the superintendent of insurance may inspect the books and records of such insurance carrier and examine its agents, officers, and directors under oath.

"(c) Any person or persons who shall in the District of Columbia act or assume to act as agent for any insurance carrier whose authority to do business in such District has been suspended, while such suspension remains in force, or who shall willfully make a false or fraudulent statement of the business or condition of any such insurance carrier, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the jury.

"(d) Whenever by this act or the terms of any policy contract any officer is required to give any notice to an insurance carrier, the same may be given by delivery or by mailing by registered letter, properly addressed and stamped, to the principal office or chief agent of such insurance carrier within the District of Columbia, or to its home office, or to the secretary, general agent, or chief officer thereof in the United States.

"SEC. 38. That notice of an injury for which compensation is payable under this article shall be given to the employer within 10 days after the accident, and also in case of the death of the employee resulting from such injury within 30 days after such death. Such notice may be in writing and contain the name and address of the employee and state in ordinary language the time, place, nature, and cause of the injury, and be signed by him or by a person on his behalf or in case of death by any one or more of his dependents or by a person on their behalf. The failure to give such notice, unless excused by the compensation commissioner either on the ground that notice for some sufficient reason could not have been given or on the ground that the insurance carrier or employer, as the case may be, has not been prejudiced thereby, shall be a bar to any claim under this act.

"Whenever an accident occurs to any employee it shall be the duty of the employer to at once report such accident and the injury resulting therefrom to the compensation commissioner. Such report shall state (a) the time, cause, and nature of the accident and injuries, and the probable duration of the injury resulting therefrom; (b) whether the accident arose out of or in the course of the injured person's employment; (c) any other matters the rules and regulations of the commissioner may prescribe.

"SEC. 39. After an injury, and so long as he claims compensation, the employee, if so requested by his employer or ordered by the compensation commissioner, shall submit himself to examination, at reasonable times and places, by a duly qualified physician or surgeon designated and paid by the employer or the compensation commissioner. The employee shall have the right to have present at such examination any duly qualified physician or surgeon provided and paid by him. No fact communicated to, or otherwise learned by any physician or surgeon who may have attended or examined the employee, or who may have been present at any examination, shall be privileged, either in hearings provided for by this act or in any action at law brought to recover damages against an employer for an injury subject to the provisions of this act. If the employee refuses to submit himself to or in any way obstructs such examination requested by and provided for by the employer, his right to compensation and his right to take or prosecute any proceedings under this act shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases, and no compensation shall at any time be payable for the period of suspension, unless in the opinion of the compensation commissioner the circumstances justify the refusal or obstruction. The employer, or the compensation commissioner, shall have the right in any case of death to require an autopsy at the expense of the party requesting the same.

"SEC. 40. That all questions arising under this act, if not settled by agreement of the parties interested therein, with the approval of the compensation commissioner, shall be determined by the commissioner except as otherwise herein provided.

"SEC. 41. That if, after seven days from the date of the injury, or at any time in case of death, the employer and the injured employee or his dependents reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, a memorandum of the agreement in the form prescribed by the compensation commissioner shall be filed with the commissioner; otherwise such agreeent shall be voidable by the employee or his dependents.

"If approved by the commissioner, thereupon the memorandum shall for all purposes be treated as an award by the commissioner and shall be enforceable by the court's decree, as hereinafter specified.

"SEC. 42. That if the employer and the injured employee or his dependents fail to reach an agreement in regard to compensation under this act, or if they have reached such an agreement which has been signed and filed with the compensation commissioner and compensation has been paid or is due in accordance therewith, and the parties thereto then disagree as to the continuance of any payment under such agreement, either party may make application to the compensation commissioner for a hearing in regard to the matters at issue and for a ruling thereon.

"Immediately after such application has been received the commissioner shall set the date for a hearing, which shall be held as soon as practicable, and shall notify the parties at issue of the time and place of such hearing.

"The compensation commissioner or a deputy commissioner shall hear the parties at issue and their representatives and witnesses, and shall determine the dispute in a summary manner. The award, together with a statement of the findings of fact, rulings of law, and other matters pertinent to the questions at issue, shall be filed with the record of the proceedings, and a copy of the award shall immediately be sent to the parties in dispute.

"SEC. 43. That upon his own motion, before judicial determination or upon the application of any party in interest on the ground of change in condition, the compensation commissioner may at any time review any award, and on such review may make an award ending, diminishing, or increasing the compensation previously awarded, or awarding compensation where no compensation was previously awarded, subject to the maximum and minimum provided in this act, and shall immediately send to the parties a copy of the award. No such review shall affect such award as regards any moneys paid.

"SEC. 44. That any employer, employee, dependent, or person feeling aggrieved by any decision or award of the compensation commissioner affecting his interests under this act may have the same reviewed by a proceeding in the nature of an appeal and initiated in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the court shall determine whether the commissioner has justly considered all the facts concerning injury, whether he has exceeded the powers granted him by the act, and whether he has misconstrued the law and facts applicable in the case decided. If the court shall determine that the commissioner has acted within his powers and has correctly construed the law and facts, the decision of the commissioner shall be confirmed, otherwise it shall be reversed or modified. Upon the hearing of such an appeal the court shall, upon motion of either party filed with the clerk of the court, according to the practice in civil cases, submit to a jury any question of fact involved in such case. The proceedings in every such an appeal shall be informal and summary, but full opportunity to be heard shall be had before judgment is pronounced. No such appeal shall be entertained unless notice of appeal shall have been served personally upon the commissioner within 30 days following the rendition of the decision or award appealed from. An appeal shall not be a stay. If the decision or award of the commissioner shall be changed or modified, the practice prevailing in civil cases as to the payment of costs and the fees of medical and other witnesses shall apply. Appeal shall lie from the judgment of the Supreme Court to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, as in other civil cases, and such appeal shall have precedence over all cases except criminal cases.

"The corporation counsel for the District of Columbia shall be the legal adviser of the commissioner and shall represent him in all proceedings whenever so requested by the commissioner. In all court proceedings under or pursuant to this act the decision of the commissioner shall be prima facie correct and the burden of proof shall be upon the party attacking the same.

"SEC. 45. That any party in interest may file in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a certified copy of an agreement approved by the compensation commissioner, or of an order or decision of the commissioner, or of an award of the commissioner unappealed from, or of an award of the commissioner affirmed upon appeal, whereupon said court, upon proof of default in payment or that the security for payment is doubtful, shall render a decree in accordance therewith and notify the parties. Such decree shall have the same effect, and all proceedings in relation thereto shall thereafter be the same, as though said decree had been rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by said court.

"SEC. 46. That if the compensation commissioner or the court before which any proceedings for compensation or concerning an award of compensation have been brought, under this act, determines that such proceedings have not been so brought upon reasonable ground, it shall assess the whole cost of the proceeding upon the party who has so brought them.

"Claims for legal services in connection with any claims arising under this act and claims for services or treatment rendered or supplies furnished pursuant to section 20 of this act, shall not be enforceable unless approved by the compensation commissioner.

"If so approved, such claim or claims shall become a lien upon the compensation awarded, but shall be paid therefrom only in the manner fixed by the commissioner.

"SEC. 47. That any person who shall knowingly secure or attempt to secure larger compensation or compensation for a longer term than he is entitled to, or knowingly secure or attempt to secure compensation when he is not entitled to any, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $500 or imprisoned not exceeding 12 months, or both, in the discretion of the court, and shall from and after such conviction cease to receive any compensation.

"SEC. 48. That in this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

"(a) 'Employer' shall include any individual, firm, association, or corporation, or the receiver or trustee of the same, or the legal representative of a deceased employer, using the service of another for pay. If the employer is insured, it shall include his insurer so far as applicable.

"(b) 'Employee' shall include every person, including a minor, who is employed by another under any lawful contract of service or apprenticeship, written or implied. Any reference to an employee who has been injured shall, where such employee is dead, include a reference to his dependents and other persons to whom compensation may be payable, or, where the employee is a minor or incompetent, to his committee or guardian or next friend.

"(c) 'Average weekly wages' shall mean the earnings of the injured employee, including 'overtime,' in the employment in which he was working at the time of the accident during the period of 52 weeks immediately preceding the date of the accident, dividend of 52; but if the injured employee lost more than seven consecutive calendar days during such period, although not in the same week, then the earnings for the remainder of such 52 weeks shall be divided by the number of weeks remaining after the time so lost has been deducted. Where the employment prior to the injury extended over a period of less than 52 weeks, the method of dividing the earnings during that period by the number of weeks and parts thereof during which the employee earned wages shall be followed: Provided, That results fair and just to both parties will be thereby obtained. Where by reason of a shortness of time during which the employee has been in the employment of his employer or the casual nature or terms of his employment it is impracticable to compute the average weekly wages as above defined, regard shall be had to the average weekly amount which during 52 weeks previous to the accident was being earned by a person of the same grade and character employed in the same class of employment in the same locality or community.

"If the injured employee at the time of the injury is regularly employed at higher wages than formerly during the preceding 52 weeks, only such higher wages shall be taken into consideration in computing his average weekly wages. If the injured employee was of such age and experience when injured that under natural conditions his wages would be expected to increase, that fact may be taken into consideration in determining his average weekly wages.

"But where for exceptional reasons the foregoing would be unfair either to the employer or employee, such other method of computing average weekly wages may be resorted to as will most nearly approximate the amount which the injured employee would be earning were it not for the injury.

"'Earnings' shall include the reasonable value of board, lodging, housing, fuel, and similar advantages which the employee receives from the employer as part of his remuneration, but shall not include payments by the employer to cover special expenses entailed on the employee by his employment.

"(d) 'Injury' and 'personal injury' shall mean only injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, and shall not include a disease in any form, except where it results naturally and unavoidable from the accident.

"(e) Hernia shall not be deemed an injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employee's employment, unless it be proven to the satisfaction of the compensation commissioner—first, that there was an injury resulting in hernia; second, that the hernia appeared suddenly; third, that it was accompanied by pain; fourth, that the hernia immediately followed an accident; fifth, that the hernia did not exist prior to the accident for which compensation is claimed.

"SEC. 49. That the rule that statutes in derogation of the common law are to be strictly construed shall have no application to this act; but this act shall be so interpreted and construed as to effectuate its general purpose.

"SEC. 50. That if the provisions of this act relative to compensation for injuries to or death of employees become invalid because of any final adjudication, the period intervening between the occurrence of an injury or death, not previously compensated for under this act by lump-sum payment or completed periodical payment, shall not be computed as a part of the time limited by law for the commencement of any action relating to such injury or death: Provided, That such action be commenced within one year after such final adjudication, but in any such action any sum paid to the employee on account of injury for which the action is prosecuted shall be taken into account.

"SEC. 51. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to injuries or death, nor to accidents which occurred prior to the taking effect of this act.

"SEC. 52. That the sum of $20,000 annually for the years 1922 and 1923, or so much thereof as may be necessary annually for the maintenance of the office of the compensation commissioner for the District of Columbia and the payment of the salaries and expenses of the commissioner and his employees, is hereby appropriated, and shall be payable to the order or orders of the said commissioner from time to time, as in this law provided, and the auditor of the District of Columbia shall draw his warrant or warrants therefor upon the United States Treasury, as in law provided for the annual appropriations in the District of Columbia. And a further appropriation is hereby made of the sum of $5,000 for the year 1922 for the neecessary expenses of the aforesaid compensation commissioner to cover printing, office fixtures, and such other legitimate expenses as the commissioner may incur in establishing his office as in this act contemplated, and the auditor of the District of Columbia shall draw his warrant upon the United States Treasury for the said sum of $5,000, or any part thereof, upon the order or orders presented to the auditor of the District of Columbia by the said commissioner.

"SEC. 53. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed to the extent that they conflict with this act and no further.

"SEC. 54. That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage, but that its application as between employers and employees shall date from and include the 1st day of July, 1922."

During the reading of the substitute the following occurred:

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, would it not be possible to have a vote taken on this matter and then by unanimous consent have the substitute read and subject to amendment during the reading. If that can be done I think it would save a lot of time. I have no desire to interfere or unnecessarily take up the time of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There will be no unanimous consent given.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the substitute constitutes an entire bill. I am a member of the committee and I can not get a copy of that bill. The bills are not available for the membership. There are but five or six copies on the floor, and how can Members of this House intelligently offer amendments to a bill that they know nothing about?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to secure a copy of the Underhill bill and am unable to do so.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move to lay on the table the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order in the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit a unanimous-consent request in the interest of an early and intelligent procedure. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill and substitute be dispensed with——

Mr. BLACK. I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will not the gentleman do me the courtesy to listen to my full request; that the first section of the Underhill substitute may be considered as pending as a substitute for the first section of the Fitzgerald bill; that there may be a debate of one hour, in which gentlemen on each side may outline the main features of the substitute; and thereafter, in the event that the first section of the Underhill substitute is accepted as a substitute for the Fitzgerald bill, the balance of the Underhill substitute may be read section by section and open for amendment as read. Now, if I may proceed for a minute, my idea is that the first question for the House to decide is whether they favor in general the Fitzgerald bill or the Underhill bill. If by chance they do prefer the Underhill substitute, the further sections should be open to amendment as they are read and perfected as the House may desire. My request is not based on the advocacy of either bill, but merely to put it in shape, so that the House may do what it desires.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I understand there are no copies of the Underhill bill for Members of the House, and it is difficult for me to see how Members can act intelligently on a bill without hearing the Underhill bill read. So I object to the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL. There are no copies of the Underhill bill, which consists of 48 pages, to be had. Would it be in order to move to lay the bill now being read, the Underhill substitute, on the table?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not.

The Clerk completed the reading of the substitute.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment, and I offer a preferential motion. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the Fitzgerald bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the enacting clause of the Fitzgerald bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 17 ayes and 55 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the Underhill amendment that on page 49, line 11, it provides for an appropriation of $20,000, which is in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that if the point of order will lie at all, it would lie only against the appropriation and not against the whole amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. It has been held differently, I would say to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts or anyone in his behalf desire to be heard?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I will modify that section by inserting the words "authorized to be."

Mr. BLANTON. That does not affect the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the entire amendment. It seems to me that would not lie under any circumstances.

Mr. BLANTON. If the amendment is bad in any particular, it is bad in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first section of the Fitzgerald bill and offer the Underhill bill again with a modification in section 2 on page 49, line 11, by inserting the words "authorized to be" before the word "appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. UNDERHILL moves to strike out of the Fitzgerald bill on page 1, lines 3 to 6, inclusive, and on page 2, lines 1 to 6, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: The Underhill bill with the following amendment: Page 49, line 11, insert the words "authorized to be" before the word "appropriated."

Mr. BLANTON. But, Mr. Chairman, we want the bill read. We want to get familiar with it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the gentleman from Texas wants to press that point. It is only fair that these bills be given a hearing. I think the gentleman is just as anxious as I am to see the working people of the District of Columbia enjoy the benefits of the workmen's compensation act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman upon that. I am for his bill as against the Fitzgerald bill, but when only six or eight copies of the gentleman's bill are available, how on earth is the membership going to know what is in the bill unless we have it read?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is already in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. There is only one way in which we can obviate the difficulty, and that is by securing unanimous consent that the amendment be not read.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the second reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the second reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask those Members who have followed the bill with some difficulty if they could possibly have a more fair or equitable measure for the real benefit of the worker in the District of Columbia than this bill. Starting at page 17 of my bill I provide for every possible known and supposed contingency.

I first take up the question of death, the amount that shall be paid at death, and then the question of total permanent disability, and then of temporary or partial disability, and go along through to the loss of a thumb or a finger or a part of a thumb or a finger, the loss of a toe or part of a toe, the loss of a hand or the loss of an arm, the loss of a leg or the loss of an eye, and so on, through every portion of the human frame. I tried to put into this bill the amounts that shall be paid, and there is no insurance company ever organized that could get away from those amounts. There is no possibility of fraud. There is no possibility of the exploitation of the worker, no matter how ignorant or friendless he may be. I go through the occupational diseases, so far as they are known and can be applied to insurance, and I go through with the wife and the children, with dependents of every nature. Then, on page 9 of my bill I make certain exemptions, and I think the Members of the House will agree with me that these exemptions should be made. I provide that the provisions of the bill shall not apply to—

(1) Any employment in commerce between the District of Columbia and any of the States, Territories, or possessions of the United States or any foreign nation or nations, in the service of a common carrier by railroad;
(2) Any employment that is casual and not in the usual course of the trade, business, occupation, or profession of the employer;
(3) Any employment in an occupation not carried on by the employer for the sake of pecuniary gain;
(4) Any employment as a household domestic servant; or
(5) Any employment by an eleemosynary institution or association.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. If an institution that has large funds has an elevator conductor who is injured in the course of his employment, why should the fact that the institution is engaged in philanthropic work prevent its rendering justice to its own employees?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I doubt if that contingency would ever arise. Any philanthropic concern that would not take care of its own would not deserve the name of philanthropy.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there anything in the gentleman's bill that relates to anything outside of what is ordinarily known as workmen's compensation?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not that I know of.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no other form of insurance covered in it?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And there is no provision of any sort which might be liability insurance arising out of any other situation or relief than that of workmen and employer?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not at all. It has been very difficult for me, and I think possibly it is my own fault, to explain this situation about the bill in a plain and simple sort of way. I have tried to make it clear to every Member of the House that there is no opposition in my bill to workmen's compensation. I am as heartily in favor of it and would go as far as anyone in providing protection for the workingmen.

Second, that my objection to the Fitzgerald bill is based almost entirely upon the matter of principle, the principle of the Government going into business in competition with those who pay the taxes and the running expenses of the Government. Where are you going to get your revenue to run this Government if you do not get it from these corporations and from the individuals?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have his time extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERHILL. May I just finish that sentence? Where are you going to get the funds to run this Government if you do not get them from the taxpayer? Suppose you do return to certain favored individuals who take out insurance a certain amount of the premiums that to-day is included in taxation, rental of buildings, the purchase of merchandise, stationery, and other necessary supplies, where are you going to get the funds; and if you are going to start with insurance funds, where are you going to end?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There are a good many Members of the House who feel the same way I do, I believe. I believe in the enactment of a workmen's compensation law. Now, the claim has been made here that this particular measure for which the gentleman speaks to-day has not been considered fairly in committee. Now, could the gentleman, then, very briefly tell us the main points of difference between the Fitzgerald bill and the Underhill bill, and then just how the Underhill bill compares with State legislation along that particular line? I think that would be very helpful to Members of the House.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I have tried to do that, and I am perfectly willing to go over it again if I have the time. There are four States that have the exclusive features of State insurance. My colleague claims there are eight, but I do not think that he can name eight States which have exclusive features. There are other provisions in the laws of those States, including his own State of Ohio, and the State of Ohio allows one of the worst features that can possibly enter into workmen's compensation, self-insurance—that is, that the employer of more than five people in his State can by filing a bond insure himself, and the poor devil who gets hurt has got to go to him upon whom he depends for a job and living and ask him for a settlement. That is absolutely contrary to all the best ideas and policies in workmen's compensation.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. McSWAIN. Assuming the fixing of the compensation for an eye—there are no teeth involved in this matter I believe—is the same in the gentleman's bill as that of Mr. FITZGERALD, does it make any difference to the injured employee whether the money is paid out of a fund absolutely contributed under the Fitzgerald bill or paid by an insurance company under the gentleman's bill?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Not a particle. That is a funny situation. I am supposed to be a reactionary. I do not know where they got that idea, but I am supposed to be a reactionary, and here is a situation where a so-called progressive brings in a bill that protects the moneyed interests. Its greatest feature is the claim that it is going to cost the heartless employer less money.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman inform the House when the Fitzgerald bill was first introduced, on what date?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am afraid I can not do that, sir.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ABERNETHY. The position in which most of us find ourselves is that we do not know what the gentleman is talking about. We have not got a copy of the gentleman's bill; we have not got any of the hearings; and we are all in the dark and do not know how to vote. I am sure I do not know how to vote. I have received several telegrams about it, and I would like to vote intelligently, and I do not know what the gentleman is talking about, and I would like to know something about it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask the gentleman a question about that clause in the bill that exempts corporations or institutions that are conducted without profit. Now, we find close to the Pennsylvania Station the Grace Dodge Hotel, for example. I understand that is an institution that is not conducted for profit, and yet if an employee is injured, I presume that employee would have an action at law for such injury.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think the court has decided that in such an instance as that they were not exempted.

Mr. BLACK. I want to vote for the gentleman's bill; I would much prefer that he amend it on that particular point.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am perfectly willing to safeguard the bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. In the State of New York we have private State insurance. We also permit private companies to engage in that business. As a matter of fact, most of the people do business with the private companies because they can get better service. As I understand the provisions of the Fitzgerald bill, it gives the Federal Government a monopoly of the business in the District of Columbia. Is that true?

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is true.

Mr. HUSTED. What possible justification is there for giving the Federal Government a monopoly of the business instead of permitting the other people to come in and get their share of it if they are in a position to render good service and give proper rates?

Mr. UNDERHILL. There is absolutely no justification, except the justification that my friend from New York [Mr. LONDON], who sits there, and so ably represents the Socialist Party, absolutely none, except the question of socialism. If we are desirous of adopting that provision, if we are desirous of adopting that attitude, if we are desirous of adopting that policy in the United States, let us start with the Fitzgerald bill. It is as good as anything else for a starter.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that I can add anything further. I regret exceedingly that there are not more copies of the Underhill bill available, and that the Members have not had a chance to study it further. I suppose the assumption has been made that almost every Member of this body has had previous experience in his local legislature, and that the legislature of almost every State in this Union has passed a workingmen's compensation bill. It is easy to visualize the purpose of a workingmen's compensation bill. At least so I think, and most of the Members can realize what is involved here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some analyses of the Underhill bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

A MISERABLE SUBSTITUTE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on the substitution of this bill I want to say that as soon as it was proposed, besides looking it over myself, I sent the so-called Underhill bill to America's best known insurance actuary and compensation expert, Miles M. Dawson, and I have here from him three solid pages of typewriting, and I will read them.

LETTER FROM MILES M. DAWSON.

I have examined the Underhill bill (H. R. 9546), which was offered as a substitute for the Fitzgerald workingmen's compensation bill in the District of Columbia, which was drafted by the American Association for Labor Legislation. Aside from many features of the Underhill bill which are most undesirable, I find the following, which certainly ought to be fatal to it:

READY FOR ALMSHOUSE.

The provision in case of total and permanent disability is limited to payments aggregating $5,000, which, if one were injured to whom the maximum amount of $25 per week was payable, would mean that after less than four years' maintenance he would be a candidate for the almshouse. It would string out longer, of course, for those with smaller compensation, but even in the case of a man whose compensation was but $10, he would still be abandoned to pauperism after but 10 years.

Not only have the compensation laws of all the enlightened States, including the law adopted by Congress making provision for the employees of the Government, recognized the necessity of supporting the totally disabled throughout the whole period of the disability, but very obviously such is the only rational and defensible position that can be taken.

Limitations such as are here proposed were once being crowded into these bills by the insurance companies on the grounds of the uncertainty of the amount of the claim. There was never any truth in the statement as the present value of such claims is always readily determinable and now standards are everywhere recognized for determining their value.

The same objection in regard to limitation applies to the $3,750 limit for temporary total disability, which means that if one were still totally disabled, although it had not been determined to be permanent in character, he would, if his benefit were $25 per week, be cut off after receiving it less than three years.

BREEDER OF PAUPERISM.

The same objection applies to the limitation of benefits for permanent partial disability, which may be very nearly total, and would deprive the injured person of his compensation after a brief period, which might again mean pauperism.

The same objection is also applicable to the limitation of $3,000 to certain forms of permanent partial disability. It should be observed, likewise, that the change of the rate of compensation from 66⅔ per cent to 50 per cent is not only unfair but is inconsistent with the language at the beginning of subdivision 3 on page 18.

The same again applies to the limitation in amount of compensation for temporary partial disability, owing to the fact that disabilities may be treated as temporary merely because it is not proved positively that they will be permanent, although they continue for a very long time.

AN OUTRAGEOUS FEATURE.

The most outrageous feature, however, is to be found in the limitation of the payments to dependents in case of death to 416 weeks, or in other words eight years, and also to a maximum of $5,000.

The first of these was in the Sutherland interstate commerce bill, having been copied from the earlier laws in several States, but was abandoned and withdrawn by Senator SUTHERLAND. The outrageous character of it is readily recognized when it is considered that as regards a young baby it would cut off the provision at about the time the child entered school.

Originally the disingenuous objection was raised by the insurance companies that it was not possible to know definitely what was the liability if there were no such limit. These companies had or could have had competent actuarial advice and should have known better. In any event they have long ago learned better, and standards for the computation of these benefits are now firmly established and are in use throughout this country and Canada. There is now no longer any excuse whatever for such a departure from sound principle.

PLAN MOST UNDESIRABLE.

The mode of making provision is also most undesirable. It does not definitely provide, as do all the workmen's compensation laws in this country, what provision shall be made for each of the dependents; and in addition to causing a payment of two-thirds the wages to be made to the wife alone if there are no children, it would also cause the full amount to be paid to a single child or other wholly dependent person. This would in many cases be excessive from both standpoints—that is, as real compensation and also as provision for support.

The provision in section 26 for redemption for a commuted sum is vicious in the extreme. Nothing so bad has, so far as I know, been proposed in any other American workmen's compensation bill. I am wondering why Mr. UNDERHILL did not consult the workmen's compensation law of Massachusetts before drafting his bill.

The provision in section 41 for an agreement is in my opinion bad. If the agreement is filed, it is no longer voidable by the employee, and the approval of the commissioner is not required except for the purpose of making it to be treated as an award. In fact, this would mean that the insurance companies' settlements would be final.

The provision in section 42 does not give the commissioner the power to review and disapprove such an agreement and to proceed to make an award, but merely gives him power if there is a disagreement as to the continuance of a payment under the agreement.

The provision in regard to the courts is, in my opinion, also bad, as it would give an opportunity for the insurance companies to go into the courts and have a review of the facts as well as the law. This would enable them to force compromise in almost any case.

WASHINGTON MERCHANTS TO SUFFER.

Not only does this bill admit the insurance companies as carriers, which will nearly double the premiums that it would be necessary for the employers in the District of Columbia to pay in order to provide the same benefit, but, whether intentional or not, the compensation payable has been so reduced, as compared with the bill already introduced, as to amount to a diversion of moneys needed to support the totally and permanently disabled and the seriously though temporarily disabled, and, above all, the widows during their widowhood and minor children during their school years, in such manner that the total burden on employers would not perhaps be greater, notwithstanding that from 35 to 50 per cent of the premiums paid by them would go to insurance companies over and above the claims paid, for expenses and profits than under the adequate Fitzgerald bill, already in.

The enlightened representatives of employers and employees in the Province of Manitoba two years ago, having found that under their then statute the compensation payable was, as this would be and for much the same reasons, wholly inadequate, and that on the other hand from 35 per cent to 50 per cent of the premiums paid went for expenses and profits of insurance companies, repealed their law and adopted one providing for an exclusive State fund and increasing the compensation so as to remedy the evils complained of. The result was a scale of benefits which makes adequate provision for workmen without increasing the rates which the employers had previously been paying. The Underhill bill, as compared with the Fitzgerald bill now before Congress, is of precisely the contrary type, viz, the sort that reduces the compensation and diverts the equivalent of this reduction, or more than this, out of the premiums paid to the payment of unnecessary expenses and of profits of the insurance companies.

MILES M. DAWSON,
Consulting Actuary, New York City.

SOFT FOR INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The Underhill bill is loosely and carelessly drawn, a botch, and unworkable. It is the product to be expected from the hands of those who would vaunt profiteering and greed under the hypocritical disguise of a workmen's compensation act. It is masquerading, for it is really a "bill to create unearned profits for insurance companies." The following, including comparison with experience in the various States, is a concise statement of the defects in the Underhill bill:

INADEQUATE AND ILLOGICAL PROVISIONS OF THE SO-CALLED UNDERHILL COMPENSATION BILL.

1. Compensation for permanent total disability is limited to $5,000.

At the maximum rate of compensation, $25 a week, the $5,000 would be used up in less than four years, at the end of which time the injured employee, still permanently totally disabled, would be abandoned to charity.

At the rate of $10 a week the $5,000 would stretch over nearly 10 years, but would then cease, leaving the totally disabled employee without resources.

In 25 States the amount which may be paid for permanent total disability is unlimited.

2. Compensation for temporary total disability is limited to $3,750.

If the compensation rate were $25 a week, the $3,750 would be exhausted in less than three years, and even if still disabled the employee would then be cut off.

THE CASE OF A WIDOW.

3. Compensation to the widow and children is limited to $5,000 for eight years.

At $25 a week the $5,000 would be exhausted and they would be cut off in less than four years. Even if the weekly rate is low enough to run eight years, do we wish to withdraw support from a young baby at such a tender age? Furthermore, to be thrown upon her own resources at the expiration of eight years would be doubly hard, because the widow would then be approaching an age when it would be difficult for her to obtain employment.

In 23 States the amount which may be paid in death cases is unlimited, and in 8 States compensation is payable until the death or remarriage of the widow and until children reach an employable age.

UNNECESSARY EXPENSE.

4. Office of compensation commissioner is created, with deputies and assistants.

This is an unnecessary expense, since the work could be better performed by the experienced United States Employees' Compensation Commission already in existence.

5. Claims are to be settled by "agreement" between workmen and employers.

In practice it has been found that the "agreement" method subjects injured employees, who wish to avoid trouble, to coercion by insurance adjusters.

6. Insurance companies would be given opportunity to profit under the Underhill bill, which would:

A. Increase expense. The average expense ratio of stock insurance companies is nearly 40 per cent of premiums as compared with about 4 per cent for exclusive State funds.

B. Produce friction and suspicion on the part of employees. The Conner Commission investigation in New York State disclosed underpayments on the part of commercial carriers amounting to $5,700,000.

Mr. WYANT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. You have a report on the bill in the RECORD?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. It is very complete. It is filed with this bill.

Mr. WYANT. On the same subject?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The bill which was reported to the House and which came up for discussion this morning before the Committee of the Whole is accompanied by a complete analysis of this sort of legislation, and the bill itself; but it does not touch this bill which has been offered as a substitute.

Mr. WYANT. Did you submit your bill at the same time for report to the same organization?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. That has been analyzed at the same time for report by the same organization, and it has been analyzed by Mr. Mackey, of the gentleman's State, and I have here three letters, one addressed to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and one to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], of Pittsburgh, a Representative of your State, and one to myself, analyzing and approving of this bill in its form.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Has the District of Columbia any workmen's compensation law now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has none except as the Federal law protects the public employees of the District government.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I mean it has no statutory law pertaining to the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. A short time ago, in the speech the gentleman made regarding his own bill, he stated that the lumbermen of Michigan had sufficient power to prevent their being included in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I made that statement I was in error. I intended to say "Maine." I was in error if I used the word "Michigan." In Maine the lumbering interests were strong enough to have that exception made, and those workmen engaged in lumbering were not protected. In Tennessee the mining interests were strong enough to have that interest exempted. I am sure the domestic-service clause may irritate enough Members to prompt them to exclude those in domestic service. They ought not to be excluded. The cost is very slight—something like a dollar or two a year per servant. But if that provision has irritated a good many people interested in the enactment of this law, it can be omitted. The committee have an amendment to the bill to meet their wishes.

Now, why should we have competition in the District of Columbia? Because both sides, as I have read heretofore, have said that the scope here is too small. We have only from 100,000 to 108,000 employees in the District of Columbia. You have got to have an exclusive fund or you have got to have a commission to watch the insurance companies. As reported by the Government's compensation expert:

It takes almost as much time and costs as much money and requires as many employees to do the follow-up work, if it is to be done adequately, as it does to do the work originally.

That is always true, and it is admitted. You commence to create unnecessary expense when the insurance company comes in. They have to have their agents to solicit business. If you put a fund alongside of it, the fund can not exist successfully in the face of that competition, because it can not solicit business. It can not bring itself to the attention of manufacturers and others without spending money. Under a law which compels an employer to insure his risk there will be no need of agents' expenses if an exclusive fund is provided. The Conner investigation committee of New York, moreover, shows what the result of competition has been there. There have been underpayments by the insurance companies to the extent of over $5,000,000. That is bound to be so where you keep up the friction between the employer and the employee, and you make no progress if you substitute an insurance adjuster for the employer, because your friction is the same. The contest is on, and always the employee is at a disadvantage.

It is apparent that the bill introduced here is a substitute for the benefit of the insurance companies. It is repudiated by all of those interested in the workingmen. It is repudiated by every organization here in Washington that is going to be subjected to it. I may say at this time that I, for one, voted to include the domestic service in my bill, because the women in the District of Columbia are associated together in an alliance. They had an annual meeting and they came before the committee intending to make an investigation of the provisions of this bill with the idea that they were going to defeat it. But they went into it; the conditions and provisions were explained to them, and what it was intended to do, and the Housekeeper's Alliance then passed a resolution supporting the bill, and under those circumstances that provision remained in the bill, but if you are strongly opposed I am willing to have it excluded.

INSURANCE AGENTS' TACTICS.

I insert herewith evidence of the peculiar campaign of organized insurance agents in selfish opposition to this beneficial legislation:

No other measure before the Congress in some time has occasioned such a volume of correspondence addressed to Members. A propaganda among local agents of the insurance companies compels the writing of letters, most of them carrying threats of reprisal unless the individual addressed obeys the commands of the insurance lobby. The tone of correspondence is arrogant and has caused much comment. * * *

The silly boast of a number of Cambria County insurance agents of their wonderful power and influence has attracted some notice, and, when called to the official attention of the House of Representatives, will result in many Members resenting such bold assertions. Inasmuch as organized labor and important civic organizations have championed the Fitzgerald bill, there will come a reaction against the claims of the insurance agents which may defeat the purposes of their employers. (Johnstown (Pa.) Tribune, July 5, 1922.)

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 45, line 18, after the word "minor," insert the following: "Except domestic service in households, and farm employees."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, what I think the committee ought to do, expressing one individual opinion, is to adopt the Underhill substitute and then recommit it back to the committee for consideration. This bill—that is, the Underhill bill—contains 50 pages. Its contents are practically unknown to the membership, outside of a very few men. The Fitzgerald bill is absolutely preposterous, and any man who believes that the Government ought not to engage in private business will hold that we ought not to consider it for a moment. The 50-page Underhill bill is offered as a substitute and we ought to adopt it and then send it back to the committee to be considered. How do you know that it does not contain things that you disapprove of? The membership of the House has not had an opportunity to properly investigate it. I will show you that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] himself does not understand what is in his own bill. Did he tell you that it did not permit farm employees to be included? You might laugh at the idea of farm employees in the District of Columbia, but there are some little farms and some farm employees in the District of Columbia. I challenge him to show one paragraph in his bill that excludes farm employees. It embraces farm employees.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the getleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. In one part of the bill he attempts to exclude domestic servants, but in another part of the bill he includes them. Let me show you that he includes them.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman challenges me and I would like to have him yield to let me show him the page. I wish to say to the gentleman that I think farm employees ought to come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, well, then the gentleman's position has seemingly changed since his opening speech. How many men from farming communities believe that farm employees should be included; that the farmer ought to be compelled to go in and make a report to a commission as to what employees he has and what he pays them, and their working conditions, and the hours they work, and all that business for farms? If you had to do that, the gentleman from Massachusetts would probably starve to death, because Boston city people would not get enough to eat up there in Massachusetts. The farms would not produce enough. But let me show you, on page 45, what he includes as employees.

On line 17, page 45, it says:

"Employee" shall include every person, including a minor, who is employed by another under any lawful contract of service or apprenticeship, written or implied.

Does that not embrace farm employees? Does that not embrace domestic servants? Where does it exclude them? Not at all.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. Then when he defines "employer," on page 45, here is what he says:

"Employer" shall include any individual, firm, etc., using the service of another for pay.

Does that not embrace the employers of farm hands and of domestic servants? If it does not, then the English language does not mean what it ordinarily purports to mean.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. On page 9, in section 13, you will find that these various classes are excluded.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; in one part of your bill you exclude domestic servants, though not farm hands; and in another part you do not even exclude domestic servants, as I have demonstrated by reading the definitions of employer and employee.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will not the gentleman help me to perfect the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. That is exactly what I am trying to do now, and I have offered an amendment to help the gentleman perfect it. But I merely call attention to this, that when the author himself has to have his bill perfected, it shows that it ought to go back to the committee to be properly amended. When he admits that it needs perfecting, when he admits that there are defects in it, it ought to go back and be considered in committee in an orderly manner, because there is no Congressman on earth who can properly digest 50 pages of a bill by just hearing it read amidst confusion once by the Clerk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the position of the author of the substitute under consideration, it does include farm employees, but does not include domestic servants?

Mr. BLANTON. That is his position now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not see how that could be made any clearer in legislative phraseology than it is carried in this bill. For instance, section 48 of the gentleman's amendment starts out by saying——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman must not take up all my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will get the gentleman further time. In section 48 it says "unless the context otherwise requires." On page 9, section 13, which the author of the bill has directed the gentleman's attention to——

Mr. BLANTON. What is the context of a bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. The entire bill from cover to cover.

Mr. BLANTON. From cover to cover? That embraces the subsequent conflict.

Mr. STAFFORD. It could not be any clearer language.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that the gentleman have one minute more. I think I have taken up one minute of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take the time, so I yield the floor.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will take up this proposition without any prejudgment. Let me first call your attention to the parliamentary situation. This bill was taken up by the committee several times. It was filibustered against. Roll calls were had. I believe this is the third or fourth time that the committee has reported the bill. A studied effort has been made to defeat this legislation. The Committee on the District of Columbia has very little time during this session. If you prevent the discussion of this bill to-day the probabilities are that you will have no workmen's compensation legislation at all.

The claims of those who shout "socialism," like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], ought not to have any effect upon any intelligent man. To call a thing socialism does not make it socialism, and if you are opposed to every socialistic measure you ought to oppose every public school, because there is not a more socialistic institution in the world than the public schools. The great individualist philosopher, Herbert Spencer, opposed the introduction of the public school system on the ground that it was socialistic. He made one of his most powerful attacks on socialism. Familiarity with Indiana politics does not necessarily qualify a man as an authority on social philosophy.

An effort is made here to make fools of the committee. You have before you here a bill of 31 pages. It was drafted and prepared by the American Association for Labor Legislation. Who are the members of that association? If I am not mistaken, the name of Woodrow Wilson appears on the list of the board of directors or of the advisory council of the organization.

It is composed of men who have been studying labor legislation. I do not believe that the American Association for Labor Legislation includes half a dozen men who are connected with any labor organization or with any trade-union. It is purely a group of well-meaning men and women who are interested in economic questions, and who want to alleviate as much as possible by progressive social legislation the burdens and sorrows of the great masses of the people.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. In one minute. The American Federation of Labor, representing the aggressive labor men of the country, whose business it is to point out evils and to seek remedies therefore, also favors this bill. And so you have both groups—the phlegmatic intellectuals and the active men of the labor movement both supporting it.

Now, why not come to the point. What is the opposition to it? The gentleman from Massachusetts says we want some sort of compensation legislation. Ten or fifteen years ago the 43 States of the Union which now have compensation legislation had no legislation of that kind. It was then denounced as rank socialism and anarchy by every fool whose only argument is to appeal to ignorance and prejudice. Let us see what their argument is and what is the principle upon which it is founded. I do not know what the Underhill bill is and nobody knows. An attempt is made to compel Congress to vote on 50 pages of words; copies of the Underhill bill are not available. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], after a cursory perusal of the bill, showed that he knew more about it than did the gentleman from Massachusetts himself in his reply to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I merely want to state to the gentleman that we had representatives of the labor organizations before the committee at the hearings and they were asked the question: "What do you want, this particular bill or a workmen's compensation bill?" And in every instance they replied that they wanted a workmen's compensation bill; and the inference is that the Underhill bill would be as acceptable as the Fitzgerald bill.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, yes, in the view of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Aided by the gentleman from Texas, that great friend of organized labor, the two of you, the twins of the House, on the Republican and Democratic sides—the twin brothers, in their love of organized labor, have combined to strangle the Fitzgerald bill. [Laughter.]

Now we come to the so-called competitive side of it. They say, Why should you attempt to introduce the socialistic feature of an exclusive State fund into the bill? Well, Ohio, Oregon, Washington, and Nevada have introduced that feature. They are the great socialistic States of whom the gentleman from Indiana speaks. You want to encourage private business. In what? In promoting accidents, in promoting deaths? Why, if there is any function of society that is social it is the taking care of those who are injured. Why should the death of a human being be the source of business or the source of profit?

The great genius of private business is to make a profit out of death. Accidents and death are to help stimulate the genius and initiative of business.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Is the undertaker in business for fun; is the priest in business for fun? Do not they all exploit death when they have a chance?

Mr. LONDON. Why does the gentleman take together the undertaker and the priest? The priest is supposed to lead into a new life, and the undertaker is in business for business. The gentleman undertakes to be the undertaker of State insurance. Let me say to the gentleman there are fields which are outside the range of private business. Why do you permit municipalities to establish and maintain institutions for the preservation of health? If the municipality maintains an institution for the preservaton of health, if the municipality maintains the sewerage system, if the municipality takes care of sanitary methods, if the municipality undertakes to regulate the safety and health of those in the factories, if the municipality is to conduct all these, why should not the aiding of the man who is injured in industry be a social function?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. LONDON. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Now let me call your attention to this: See how guarded they are, how jealous they are, of every public activity. We are not dealing with insurance for a large State with an enormous population. We are dealing with the District of Columbia. How much business can they do here? How much competition can there be between the State fund and the private funds in the limited field which the District offers? There is not enough business here for one fund. Private insurance costs a great deal more. They will not deny that. Now why do they oppose the State fund feature; why do they seek to confuse; why have they created this parliamentary situation? Why have they tied up the House? Reject the Underhill bill; reject the 50 pages of verbiage and take the bill reported by a majority of the committee. Let us not be the victims of our own parliamentary rules; let us follow the only logical method to discuss a bill before a committee.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. I understand the gentleman to say that the Fitzgerald bill is presented by a majority of the committee?

Mr. LONDON. I so assume.

Mr. EVANS. As I understand, the committee is composed of 21 members. The bill was reported out by 6 out of 11. Is that correct?

Mr. LONDON. If a majority of the members are not active members, they should not count them at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first section of the Underhill bill may be considered as pending as a substitute for the first section of the Fitzgerald bill, and in the event that it is so substituted, that the balance of the Underhill bill may be taken up by sections, and each section be open to amendment under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment pending should first be disposed of. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have that again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the Blanton amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 57, noes 22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request that the first section of the Underhill bill may be considered as pending as a substitute for the first section of the Fitzgerald bill, and in the event that it is substituted, that thereupon the balance of the Underhill bill shall be taken up section by section and shall be open to amendment under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not object to that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The reason I object——

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary for the gentleman to state his reason.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I would like to know the status of all these matters. Like a lot of other Members here, I am in the dark and we do not know what we are voting on. I would like to know so that I can vote intelligently. Neither of the proponents of both these bills seems to know what we are doing. They get up here and talk about this thing and the other thing and about insurance companies and about various things. I do not know what I am doing, we are in such a tangle here. I would like to know, for the benefit not only of myself but of a large membership of this House, just where we are at.

The CHAIRMAN. We are considering now an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILBERT: Strike out "$5,000," on page 17, line 12, and insert "$7,500," and strike out the following amounts on page 18: In line 10, "$3,750" and insert "$5,625"; in line 13, "$50" and insert "$75"; in line 15, "$30" and insert "$75"; in line 16, "$25" and insert "$37.50"; in line 18, "$20" and insert "$30"; in line 21, "$15" and insert "$22.50." On page 19, in line 11, "$25" and insert "$37.50"; in line 14, "$10" and insert "$15"; in line 15, "$150" and insert "$225"; in line 17, "$200" and insert "$300"; in line 18, "$150" and insert "$225"; in line 20, "$175" and insert "$262.50"; in line 22, "$100" and insert "$150"; in line 23, "$50" and insert "$75"; in line 24, "$100" and insert "$150." And on page 23, line 1, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$7,500"; and in line 17, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$4,500."

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, the District of Columbia has no workmen's compensation bill for private employment, and it should have. As a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I would say that the committee had before it two bills, either of which provides a workable system of workmen's compensation. In all frankness I want to say that the bills are well drawn and have been considered on behalf of the committee. It just remains for the House to determine which policy it wishes to pursue. The Underhill bill provides for the entry of private insurance companies—old line companies—to carry the insurance. The Fitzgerald bill does not, and that is the main difference between them. I am in favor of the Underhill bill, for the reason that I prefer that character of insurance. I hold no brief for any insurance company; I am not connected with any in any way, financially or otherwise. I practiced law before I came to Congress and fought them rather than represented them; but I prefer that character of insurance. Another feature of the Underhill bill is better for this reason: The reports, of which we read a great many, show that where private companies entered into the field they protected life and limb for the future in a better way. That determined me. It is not only so much the money involved, but it is the life and health and freedom from injury on the part of the employee. For instance, here is a man, that we will say, who has a certain risk. An inspector comes around and provides that a certain wheel shall be protected or a certain belt shall be taken off. In order to protect the future the insurance companies are anxious to take these precautions. When the State carries the insurance, that precaution is largely lacking.

The amendment that I have offered simply does this. Although I am in favor of the Underhill bill, I believe it is too niggardly toward the employee. It is based on a total disability for a death at the rate of $5,000. I know that most of the States proceed with that as the basis, but practically all of the workmen's compensation laws were passed before the war and before the higher prices that have since ensued. My amendment goes through the bill and inserts $7,500 for death or $7,500 for total disability. The other figures that were read simply serve to raise each one 50 per cent. Where a man is permitted to draw for 25 weeks I provide that he shall draw 50 per cent more, or 37½ weeks. Under the Underhill bill, and under both of the bills, the maximum is $25 a week for total disability. That will last for four years. Four years is a short time to take a man who is totally disabled, say, with the loss of both eyes, and then dump him out into the world. The effect of my amendment would be to carry him for six years, and it seems to me that that is a short enough time.

But that is not going to affect this bill so much, because under the Underhill bill, if my amendment is adopted, it will apply only to it, the risk will be carried by insurance companies anyhow. While it will, of course, increase the rate, it will not subject any individual to a great calamity.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. I will.

Mr. ROACH. The Members have not yet a copy of the Underhill bill, which seeks to amend the Fitzgerald bill. Does the gentleman's amendment do anything other than raise the several amounts?

Mr. GILBERT. It does nothing but put it on a basis of $7,500 instead of on a basis of $5,000 for total disability or death, and then raises the others in proportion.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman from Kentucky touches all of our hearts when he talks about the increased cost of living, but there is another phase and feature of the workman's compensation which has developed since it was established, and that is that unfortunately workers in some instances—and I do not reflect upon workers in general—try to take advantage of it. In other words, the lazy fellow would rather not work than work, and so consequently various States and various people who have studied this have allowed a sufficient length of time for a man to recover completely from the loss of a toe or a finger or a hand so far as recovery can be made, and also allow him sufficient time to rehabilitate himself and to secure employment. You can not carry this on indefinitely; that is not done anywhere except in the Fitzgerald bill, and if you carry it along too far it is an invitation to fraud.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the limit of compensation for death or total disability in the States generally?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Some of them run as high as $7,500, I believe Oregon; but most of them are limited to $5,000, and I think Ohio only $4,000; Massachusetts, $5,000, and an additional $1,500 if there are dependents.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. New York?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I think the same.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Illinois?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I do not know.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Was the Underhill bill considered by the District of Columbia Committee?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, I can not say it was, but that is no reflection on the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] that the committee considered both of these bills.

Mr. GILBERT. We carefully considered them and voted—but it is not proper to state what occurred in the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand, I do not ask the gentleman to disclose what occurred there.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I may say in reply that the Underhill bill never had a hearing in the committee, but it was discussed.

Mr. GILBERT. It was carefully read.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation, the Fitzgerald bill is the bill that is before the committee, and the pending amendment is the so-called Underhill bill that is offered by way of amendment by striking out the first section. We have been spending the whole day now in trying to perfect this one amendment. I think the committee need not deceive itself. If you really want to kill this bill by talking it to death, continue to pursue the course you have been pursuing all day. Those in charge of the bill have had the right ever since the first of the five-minute debate to move to close debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments thereto. Saturday night public business was so pressing that we had to stay here on Saturday night. Of course no gentleman would even work his mule on Saturday night, but we had to stay here because of pressing public business, and have been pee-daddling along here to-day. You may deceive yourselves, but you will not deceive anybody who knows anything about parliamentary procedure.

If you are not deliberately killing time, you will move to close debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto. There has been debate more liberal than on any amendment in this Congress. If the committee wants to admit that the proposed substitute is a proper basis for consideration by the committee, then there is an opportunity here, and you can take it up and consider it section by section. The committee has indicated that it does not want to do that. My suggestion to you if you are going to kill time—if that is all you are going to do—let the committee rise, adjourn the House, and let Members go to their offices and attend to their mail. You are not going to get anywhere with your present procedure. You can talk from now until the 4th day of March if you permit such a proceeding as you have permitted this afternoon.

Mr. FOCHT rose.

Mr. WINGO. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOCHT. I thought the gentleman had finished.

Mr. WINGO. I will yield the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I hope that I may be able to clear up the misapprehension in regard to the failure of any Members of this House to have had a chance to see this bill. I doubt very much whether there was ever any bill before the House that had so much propaganda from both sides as this measure. I should say a bushel basket from either side has come to my office, and I suppose that much has come to the other Members of Congress, hence if there had been any particular interest on the part of any who are now complaining about not seeing a copy of this bill or any hearings, they have had a chance from Monday, May 16, 1921, to have read this report, and the statement of the experts who appeared before the committee on this great question. I want to say to you gentlemen, as has been said by a Member a while ago, that nearly every Member here must necessarily be familiar with this character of legislation. It is certainly constructive and progressive, and it is a poor State that does not have it; and most all the States now have it and in perfect order and in fine working shape.

My own State has long had it. It has had it, but without the Government monopolistic feature, which seems to be the objection chiefly found to the Fitzgerald bill. I would call that a perfect measure, absolutely giving every scope of protection to the workingman, if it did not have that objection now found in the governmental monopolistic feature, and also on the domestic servant and the farm question. Those features, I believe, should be eliminated.

Now, my friends, I hope that this bill may not be sent back to my committee, unless you want it to die or be chloroformed there, or hung up, never again to see it at this session of Congress, for no reasonable process could bring it back. We all know about it. I will give it as my judgment, after hearing from the experts who came on from New York and Harrisburg and anywhere else Members wished to gather them, as contained in these hearings and in the bill that you speak of, which was printed in the RECORD of June 12, so that the Underhill bill may be read. If any man wants to read it. There have been many calls for copies of this bill throughout the country, from the labor interests and from the insurance people. So far as I have heard, as a Member of the committee and the chairman, I have not known definitely of any insurance man having attended, unless he appeared at the request of the committee. We have had all kinds of propaganda sent to us, all kinds of boiler-plate, and all kinds of patent insides material. No doubt you have all had that. We know all about it, and knew all about it before we came to Washington. But we need legislation of this character. It is the humanitarian thing to do. It is needed. We are only sorry we did not think of it before, and we thank those who presented it for doing so. Now, the time has come to give Washington, the District of Columbia, what she needs and all she can ask or use.

I want to say it is my opinion, judging from the manner in which this bill has been held up in various ways and without characterizing anybody, since the Government can do business for 30 per cent less than the companies can, then why object to companies and make the business competitive? I believe from my heart that we should have some kind of compensation bill. I am not simply following the example of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] on this labor question, because I am for all labor legislation that is good for the laboring man. But it looks to me, my friends, as though the resistance to this bill has been offered in the effort to try to foist upon the country and hold up as an object lesson everywhere an example of monopolistic Government control, rather than compensation legislation. The insurance, it is claimed, is obtained for 30 per cent less than the companies charge; and that being the case, how are the companies going to drive out the Government? If you accept the Underhill bill you accept this legislation without the Government monopoly feature, and without the farm feature and the servant feature. If you accept the other bill you accept the Government-control feature, and the servant feature, and the farm feature. That is the only difference between the two, my friends. In either case you get a compensation bill. Otherwise you send the bill back to committee to die at this late day in the session.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman in favor of the Underhill bill?

Mr. FOCHT. I think the Underhill bill should be passed after it has gone through the regular process and has been discussed section by section and perfected by amendments as the House sees proper.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address a few remarks to the Members of the House on a subject in which every Member of the House is interested, but it is hardly pertinent to the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. How much time has the gentleman asked for?

Mr. TINCHER. I have not asked for any additional time.

Mr. WINGO. I have no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, yesterday morning we had one of the occasional outbreaks from the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War, in an interview, very carefully prepared, has again denounced Congress. I do not know whether he does these things as a pastime, or whether he is really serious about it. This time I think the denunciation calls for a little more attention than his ordinary denunciations, because this time he denounces our Government, and says that General Harbord should be ashamed of it. He says he considers the action of this House as an insult to the General. He says:

> I do not believe the people of this country wish its great defenders treated in such a shameful way, and I should think General Harbord would feel that a country that would shamefully submit to such treatment of one of its officers was hardly worth serving.

Now, you know what it means, gentlemen of the House, for a man holding the position of a Cabinet officer to speak in that way of your country. What is the occasion of those remarks? An amendment in the Army bill providing that—

> None of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used in the payment of any officer of the Army on the active or retired list while such officer is engaged in the business of selling supplies or services to the United States, or is employed by any individual, partnership, or corporation which engages in such business.

I do not believe that any honest man—and General Harbord of all men—would consider that as a personal insult. [Applause.] I have the pleasure and distinction in this instance of knowing the Army officer referred to. I regard him as having few peers in this country. I do not believe that General Harbord is ready to say that because the American Congress has adopted an absolutely American stand, and an honest stand, and the only stand that anyone having any conception of the interests of public policy in this country would take he will denounce his country for that. Why should Secretary Weeks say that? The law, the substitutive law, pertaining to the Navy and the retired men of the Navy, has carried this provision since 1896. Why? What would you think of Congress if it did not put this provision in? We educate a man as an officer of the Army, no matter who he is, and we give him association with all the men who use the hundreds of millions of the people's money and buy supplies for the Government, and we let him be its buyer for a few years, and then we retire him with a good fat salary, paid from the Treasury of the United States.

Then the Government lets him take up the work of selling supplies to those men whom he has trained and associated with, the supplies to be paid for out of the Federal Treasury. It is not any reflection upon the officer. It is good, sound sense and business judgment. In all the instances where Congress has had a conflict with the present distinguished Secretary of War, Congress has been right and Secretary Weeks has been wrong. [Applause.]

It may not be any crime to jump onto us. That is a popular pastime. If any of the reading public want to consider the merits of Congress and the merits of Secretary Weeks, all I ask is that they may know what it is about; but it is too much for him to say about a man who has served his country like General Harbord has; it is too much to give to the press a story that General Harbord should not have any regard for his country because the Congress, representing the people of the country, has adopted this amendment in the Army bill which has been carried as substantive law pertaining to the Navy since 1896. I do not know whether Weeks ought to resign or not, but I do not know how they would do any worse. [Applause.] I guess he has some business qualifications, and I guess in some respects he makes an able officer; but when a man can get as far wrong on a little thing, when he gets as lost on a matter of principle as he did on this proposition and sends out to the country for Sunday's reading a denunciation of men who are here, not like Weeks, but men who are here by the votes of their constituents, I think if Secretary Weeks had been a little more attentive to such as this Dickinson amendment and had read a little more about what is right and what is wrong, he might still be over in the other end of the Capitol serving as a result of the verdict of the voters of his own State. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. He will be a little more careful hereafter.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the District of Columbia is almost alone in the distinction of having no workmen's compensation act. Such a proposition has been pending before Congress for some time but has been played with and filibustered against. In the meantime there are widows and orphans in the District not provided for who ought to have been provided for by such legislation. We are now within six weeks of the close of this session. If there is to be a workman's compensation law enacted at this session of Congress, it will be this Fitzgerald Act with such amendments as the House and Senate may choose to put upon it. I am not so concerned about the system as I am that Congress shall provide a workman's compensation act at this session of Congress. We have our choice. The bill was reported from the committee nearly a year ago, February 8, 1922. There is pending as a proposed substitute a bill that is not available to the House, except an occasional copy. There are pending before us a dozen or fifteen or twenty amendments to the Underhill substitute, proposed by a gentleman who says he is a friend of the bill. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD] has three pages of listed criticisms of the bill from an expert in New York. It is a bill that is before us in such shape that it can not be carefully considered. An ally and colleague of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], announces that the program is to substitute the Underhill bill for the Fitzgerald bill and then recommit it to the Committee on the District of Columbia. When we do that we bury the subject for this session of Congress. If you do carry this pending motion to substitute the Underhill bill for the Fitzgerald bill, to recommit it to the committee will be the logical thing, because it is not in print available to you all; and it is admitted by its friends, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] indicates, that it needs amendment, page after page. So the only safe thing for us to do, if we make this substitution, will be to send it back to the committee, and that will kill it for this session.

That seems to be the purpose of a great deal of this proceeding, in order to put it off. On the other hand, if we vote down the motion to substitute the Underhill bill and go ahead with the Fitzgerald bill and make such amendments to it as may commend themselves to the committee and send it on its way to the Senate, I hope that they may get it back to us before the 4th of March with such changes as they may desire, and I am not afraid of our being unduly radical or socialistic. I am afraid of Congress year after year going without any kind of a workmen's compensation act here in the District of Columbia. [Applause.] Let us take the bill that is before us and not be led off on "wild-goose chases" that will result in delay. Take the Fitzgerald bill, make the amendments you want, and send it on its way, redeeming the attitude of Congress on this subject.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman explain to us way we can not amend this Underhill bill if we want to, section by section?

Mr. BEGG. On account of the parliamentary situation.

Mr. CRAMTON. On account of the parliamentary situation. In the interest of orderly procedure, I have tried two or three times to get a unanimous-consent agreement to remedy that, but we are not able to do it.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few minutes ago our jovial, genial, and rotund friend from Kansas, of whom I am very fond [Mr. TINCHER], spoke in criticism of the Secretary of War. I do not think Mr. Weeks needs any defense at my hands or any defense at the hands of anybody else. His distinguished service as a Member of this House, his more distinguished service as a Member of the other branch of Congress, and his still more distinguished service as a member of President Harding's Cabinet, in my opinion, is of itself his best defense. In regard to what was done here the other day, which brought forth the letter from Secretary Weeks and brought forth the criticisms of my friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], that was undoubtedly an act that Congress had a perfect right to do. But, so far as my own opinion is concerned, after a study of the question which we were not permitted to have at that time because of the suddenness with which the amendment was offered, I believe we made a mistake when we discriminated against a general of the American service whose record stands forth so brilliantly and so preeminently as do the services of General Harbord. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then why have we been discriminating in exactly the same way against retired officers of the Navy since 1896?

Mr. HICKS. The custom has been for Army officers, when they have been retired, to be retired with pay. Why should we say to General Harbord, "Your services are such that we do not think you are entitled to the same treatment we have given to other Army officers"? Why should we discriminate against him?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is not the question.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman answer my inquiry?

Mr. HICKS. While it is true that the Navy has a prohibition affecting retired officers, the amendment we passed the other day can not be general in its application, for it can only operate during the life of the appropriation bill of which it was a part, and therefore will affect only those who may retire in the next fiscal year, and for that reason is, in my opinion, discriminatory.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] by way of a substitute.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt, and on a division there were—ayes 61, noes 49.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. UNDERHILL and Mr. FITZGERALD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 55.

Accordingly the amendment by way of a substitute offered by Mr. UNDERHILL was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining sections of the Fitzgerald bill be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the remaining sections of the Fitzgerald bill be stricken out. Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The committee is not in order so that we can hear what the Chair stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The committee will be in order.

Mr. BLANTON. We could not hear what the statement of the Chairman was.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the remaining sections of the Fitzgerald bill be stricken out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move in committee to recommit the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the committee do now rise, report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to amend the motion by a recommendation that the bill be recommitted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think so.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10034) providing for an employees' compensation bill had directed him to report the same back with amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Underhill amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands a separate vote on the substitute amendment.

Mr. LONDON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Is it in order to move to substitute the Fitzgerald bill for the Underhill bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, the committee having acted upon it. The same result can be accomplished by voting against the amendment.

Mr. BEGG. A parliamentary inqury, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose upon a roll call the Underhill amendment should carry, does that pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. No; the bill would have to be passed after that. The question is on the Underhill amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were 74 ayes and 53 noes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 137, nays 126, not voting 165, as follows:
